P R E F A C E.

Religious parties of every denomination, in the estimates they have endeavoured to form of their relative strength in this country, have hitherto felt the great disadvantage resulting from the absence of official returns on the subject of public worship. It has been attempted, by means of the information preserved by particular communities, in some measure to supply this deficiency, but the statistical information obtained by any one denomination has never been deemed authentic by any other ; and, after all the efforts made by particular bodies, it has been found that the results have been of little practical value, not only because their accuracy was suspected, but also on account of their meagre and limited character. For the first time in the history of this country a Census of Religious Worship has been obtained by the Government. We are now able to ascertain the entire number of places of worship, the particular sect to which they respectively belong, the number of sittings provided by each sect, and the actual attendance on a given day.

In consequence of the deep interest known to be taken in these returns, and the general wish to possess them as early as possible, arrangements were made for placing within reach of the public generally all the more important parts of the Report, at a price which should secure the object of its wide diffusion with the least possible delay.

To form a just estimate of the value of the following Tables, it is necessary to know the extensive and costly apparatus by means of which they have been obtained. This will best appear from the following statement of the “ Mode of Procuring and Digesting the Returns,” as given in the Appendix to the Report, and from which will also be seen the great attention which has been devoted to the work of supplementing defects in the returns, and rendering them as nearly as possible an exact and faithful picture of the religious state of England and Wales :—

“ For the primary object of the Census, that of simply numbering the people, England and Wales was divided into 30,610 separate plots or districts, each of which was the sphere of a single person called

“ an Enumerator, who in his turn was under the direction of a Registrar of Births and Deaths, of whom there are 2,190 in England and Wales. To these 30,610 officers was assigned the additional duty of procuring the returns relating to public worship.”

“ The first proceeding was to obtain a correct account of all existing edifices or apartments where religious services were customarily performed. The enumerators, therefore, were directed each to prepare, in the course of the week preceding March 30th, 1851, a list of all such places within his district, setting out the name and residence of the minister or other official party competent to give intelligence. To each such party was delivered or transmitted a schedule of inquiries—chiefly respecting the accommodation furnished in the building, and the number of the congregation upon Sunday, March the 30th. The schedules were of two descriptions : one for churches connected with the Established religion, and the other for places of worship belonging to the various bodies not connected with the Establishment. For the sake of ready identification, the two descriptions of schedule had each a distinctive colour, the former being printed black, and the latter red. The difference in the questions was slight : in the Church of England form the additional queries had relation to the date of consecration—the agency by which, and the cost at which, the fabric was erected, and the amount and sources of endowment. But, in deference to expressed objections, this last question was abandoned after the forms were issued, and the clergy were informed that no reply to it was wished for. In the other form, the further particulars inquired about were—the precise religious denomination of the parties making the return—whether the service was conducted in a separate building or in a portion merely, as a room—whether it was used exclusively for public worship—the date at which it was erected or first appropriated to its present use—and (with exclusive reference to Roman Catholic chapels) the space allotted as standing-room for worshippers. In both of the forms a statement of the number of free, as distinguished from rented or appropriated, sittings, was requested ; and in both there was a column for the insertion of the average number of the congregation, to provide for cases where the church or chapel might be closed upon the Sunday of the Census, or where, from peculiar circumstances, the attendance might be less than usual.”

“ When delivering the schedules to the proper parties, the enumerators told them it was not compulsory upon them to reply to the inquiries ; but that their compliance with the invitation was entirely left to their own sense of the importance and the value to the public of the information sought.”

“ The schedules were collected by the enumerators in the course of their rounds upon the Census day, viz., March the 31st, 1851. They were then transmitted to the registrar ; who, having previously received the list above referred to, would compare the number of returns collected with the number mentioned in the list, and would “ take measures to procure, if possible, the returns, if any, which were missing.”

“ Having finished his revision, the registrar despatched returns and lists together to the Census Office, London, where the 30,610 lists and about 34,000 returns were numbered in parochial order and collected into books. A further comparison of lists and returns was then proceeded with ; the Clergy List being also used to check the completeness of the Established Church returns. The result of these comparisons was the discovery of a still considerable number of deficiencies ; principally of returns from places of worship in connexion with the Church of England,—several of the clergy having entertained some scruples about complying with an invitation not proceeding from episcopal authority. In all such cases, a second application was made direct from the Census Office, and this generally was favoured by a courteous return of the particulars desired. The few remaining cases were remitted to the Registrar, who either got the necessary information from the secular officers of the church, or else supplied, from his own knowledge, or from the most attainable and accurate sources, an estimate of the number of sittings and of the usual congregation.”

“ By these means, a return was ultimately, and after considerable time and labour, procured from every place of worship mentioned in the enumerators’ lists, viz., from 14,077 places belonging to the Established Church, and from 20,390 places belonging to the various dissenting bodies, making 34,467 in all.”

“ The returns, when thus made as complete as practicable, were tabulated in parochial order. It was then discovered that many of them were defective, in not stating the number of sittings, and that others which gave the sittings omitted mention of the number of attendants. Full information as to sittings seemed to be so very essential to a satisfactory view of our religious accommodation, that an application was addressed to every person signing a return defective in this point, requesting him to rectify the omission. The intelligence thus furnished was incorporated with the original return. There are still, however 2,524 cases where no information could be got : these, wherever they occur, are mentioned in the notes to the district which contains them. Where the number of attendants was not stated for the 30th March, and it appeared that there was, nevertheless, a service held upon that day, the number specified as the usual average was assumed to have been the number present on the 30th, and was inserted in the columns for that day. Where neither in the columns for the 30th March, nor yet in the columns for the average congregation, was any number given, the deficiency was mentioned in the foot notes, as in the case just mentioned of omitted sittings. And so, where neither sittings nor attendants were supplied. It appears that the number of omissions which, in spite of the endeavours made to get the supplementary information, were obliged to be submitted to, are as follow : number of sittings not mentioned in 2,134 cases ; number of attendants unspecified in 1,004 cases ; and neither sittings nor attendants given in 390 cases. Estimates for these

“ omissions have been made for certain of the Tables, on a principle explained in the Report. They have not, however, been interpolated in the regular Tables, but are given in separate Tables by themselves. This course seemed most free from objections ; as the Tables now contain nothing beyond the original, authenticated figures—the omissions being stated in the notes, from which each reader can make his own computation, if desirous of so doing.”

“ It was also found that, frequently, an ambiguity prevailed in the answers given to the inquiries respecting ‘free sittings.’ Several of the returns from ancient parish churches, where, of course, no pew rents are received, describe the whole of the sittings as being therefore ‘free.’ But this was not the sense intended to be conveyed by the question, which contemplated the case of sittings not only free from any money payment, but also free from any particular appropriation, whether by custom or by the allocation of church officers, or otherwise,—sittings, in fact, devoted especially to the poorer classes, and which they might in freedom occupy at their own option and selection. In all such cases, therefore, it was deemed advisable, in order to secure an uniformity of meaning throughout the returns, to mention merely the total number of sittings, making no apportionment of them into ‘free’ and ‘appropriated.’ The effect of this was to ensure that all the sittings which are mentioned in the Tables as ‘free,’ (3,947,371) are really free in the manner above described ; that the ‘appropriated’ sittings (4,443,093) are those which, either from a money payment or from customary occupancy, are not accessible to anybody indiscriminately ; and that the residue (1,077,274), not adequately described, may belong to either of these classes, but most likely in greater proportion to the latter.”

“ It will be perceived that one of the questions pointed to a distinction desirable to be made between the ‘general congregation’ and the ‘Sunday scholars.’ In many of the returns the distinction was not made, the total numbers only, including both these classes of attendants, being entered. As, therefore, no correct account could be obtained of the whole number of Sunday scholars usually mingling with our congregations, it is thought to be the better course in every instance to include them in one total. In several returns a service was returned as attended by Sunday scholars only ; in these instances the numbers have been disregarded, on the theory that such services partook more of the nature of school duties than of formal public worship. Sunday scholars have been reckoned as attending religious service only where, upon the same portion of the day, some numbers are inserted for a ‘general congregation.’”

“ Another point upon which an explanation of the course adopted may be useful is the following : it was wished to show, with respect to all the 30,240 places of worship, how many of them were open for service at each portion of the Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening, and how many were closed on each of those occasions. This, of course, was ascertained by the insertion of figures denoting a service, or of a cross (×), denoting that no service was held. But

“ in several cases, where the other particulars were given, the return
“ was altogether blank upon the subject of attendants ; and the question “ was, in what way to regard such cases. The course adopted has been,
“ where the church or chapel is located in a town, to assume that a “ service was performed both morning and evening, and where the “ church or chapel is situate in the rural districts, to assume that “ services were celebrated in the morning and afternoon.”

The limits necessary to the present “Abridgment” compel the Editor to curtail the admirable “Introductory Sketch of the Progress of Religious Opinions in England till the Period of the Revolution of 1688.” The thread of the narrative, however, has been preserved, and the sketch, in its reduced proportions, will serve to show how the country has grown into that state of comparative religious freedom which so strikingly contrasts with the ages which have passed away.

It is always found difficult to describe churches in terms which are perfectly approved by their members ; still it may be hoped that the various notices given in the Report will be found impartial, this having evidently been the object of its Author, who has selected his information from the sources which appeared to possess the greatest authority. One of the most interesting and valuable portions of the Report will be found in the Author’s remarks upon “Spiritual Provision and Destitution.” So important, indeed, has it been deemed by the Editor of the present Abridgment, that he has considered it best to give it entire.

In selecting from the numerous Tables contained in the Report, the object has been to extract those which were most likely to be generally useful for religious and statistical purposes, and to render the possessor of the Abridgment as much as possible independent of the larger work,—to which, for more detailed information, it may be found necessary in some few cases to refer.

A successful commencement having been now made in the important service of learning for ourselves, and showing to other countries, the religious statistics of England and Wales, we may anticipate at each succeeding decennial period that the returns on “Religious Worship” will form a valuable part of the Census, and serve as a powerful aid to the highest interests of the nation.

R E P O R T.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, M.P., G.C.B.
HER MAJESTY'S SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

Census Office, 10th December 1853.

MY LORD,

WHEN the Census of Great Britain was taken, in 1851, I received instructions from Her Majesty's Government to endeavour to procure information as to the existing accommodation for Public Religious Worship.

Every exertion has been made to obtain accurate Returns upon which reliance may be placed ; and the duty of arranging these Returns in a tabular form, accompanied by explanatory remarks, has been confided by me chiefly to Mr. HORACE MANN. He has devoted much time and labour to the subject ; and I trust that your Lordship will be of opinion that the task delegated to him has been well executed.

I have the honour to be,

My Lord,

Your faithful servant,

GEORGE GRAHAM,

Registrar-General.

REPORT.

TO

GEORGE GRAHAM, Esq.

§c. §c. §c.

REGISTRAR GENERAL OF BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.

SIR,

IN fulfilment of the task with which you have entrusted me, I have now the honour to present, in a digested form, a Summary of the Returns collected at the recent Census, showing the amount of accommodation for worship provided by the various religious bodies in the country, and the extent to which the means thus shown to be available are used.

Origin of the Inquiry as to Religious Worship; and Manner of its prosecution.

It may, perhaps, be advantageous to preface the observations which, with your permission, I propose to offer on the state of religion in England, as disclosed in these returns, by a brief account of the origin of the Inquiry and the mode in which it has been prosecuted.

It will, doubtless, be within your recollection that, when making preparation for the General Census, and determining what information was most worthy to be gathered by the aid of the complete machinery then specially to be provided, it appeared to you exceedingly desirable to seize upon so rare an opportunity in order to procure correct intelligence on two important subjects of much public interest and controversy, viz., the number and varieties and capabilities of the religious and the scholastic institutions of the country.¹ In pursuance of this scheme, a set of Forms (reprinted in the Appendix to this volume) was prepared and issued to the various enumerators, with instructions for their distribution and collection.

These proceedings were adopted under the impression that the language of the Census Act—conferring on the Secretary of State the power to issue questions, not alone respecting the mere numbers, ages, and occupations of the people, but also as to such “further particulars” as might seem to him advisable—would amply warrant so important an investigation. When, however, in the House of Peers, objections were preferred against the contemplated Inquiry, and doubts expressed upon the applicability of the penal section of the Act to parties who might choose withholding information on these subjects, it was deemed desirable to submit the question to the legal advisers of the Crown, and their opinion proved to be confirmatory of this view.

As you, however, still retained a firm conviction of the great advantage to the public of the object for which preparations so extensive had already been matured, and for the satisfactory pursuit of which so great facilities existed, it was recommended by you to the Secretary of State that the investigation should be nevertheless continued; the various parties from whom information was to be requested being made aware that they were not by law compellable to furnish the particulars referred to in the Forms supplied to them. It seemed to you that a reliance on a general willingness to meet the wishes of the Government in so conspicuously valuable an object would be amply justified by nearly universal acquiescence; and that the necessary employment, for the ordinary purpose of the Census, of a staff of nearly 40,000 persons, visiting on two distinct occasions every house throughout Great Britain, offered an opportunity for procuring accurate statistics much too rare to be neglected—such indeed as could not possibly recur till, after another ten years interval, the Census should again be taken in 1861.

The Secretary of State assenting to these views and your proposal, printed Forms were carefully distributed by the enumerators to the proper parties. In the case of returns for places of religious worship, the forms were left with the clergyman or minister, warden or deacon, or other officer connected with each place of worship.

The extent to which returns, in answer to this application, were received, affords abundant evidence of the hearty co-operation of the clergy and the ministers of all denominations in this voluntary labour. Such returns have been obtained from 14,077 churches belonging to the Church of England, and from 20,390 places of worship belonging to all other religious bodies. From this simple fact alone it will be manifest that these returns are nearly as complete as could be wished for; and that now, for the first time, there is given to the country a full picture of the state of its religion as exhibited by its religious institutions.

Number of Sects. There are in England and Wales 35 different religious communities or sects,—27 native and indigenous, 9 foreign.* The following arrangement shows them, under certain obvious considerable and minor classes, in the order of historical formation :

PROTESTANT CHURCHES :

BRITISH :

Church of England and Ireland.

Scottish Presbyterians :

Church of Scotland.

United Presbyterian Synod.

*Presbyterian Church in German Protestant Reformers.

Reformed Church of the Netherlands.

French Protestants.

OTHER CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

Roman Catholics.

Greek Church.

German Catholics.

Italian Reformers.

Catholic and Apostolic Church.

Latter-day Saints or Mormons.

JEWS.

* These include all the bodies which have assumed any formal organization. There are, in addition, many isolated congregations of religious worshippers, adopting various appellations, but it does not appear that any of them is sufficiently numerous and consolidated to be called a "sect."

The existence of so many separate sects will be considered an advantage or an evil, in proportion as the active exercise of private judgment, or the visible unity of the Church, if both be unattainable together, is esteemed the more important acquisition. Much too of the feeling, favorable or adverse, which the contemplation of such multiplied diversities must cause, will be dependent on the question whether, notwithstanding much apparent and external difference, substantial harmony with truth may not extensively prevail.

Of great importance evidently, therefore, is it to supply some sketch, however slight, of the prominent characteristics of each sect; partly for the sake of justice to the sects themselves, in order to reveal, in some of them, accordances, perhaps not generally hitherto suspected, with admitted truth—and partly for the sake of the community at large, in order to reveal the progress of erroneous doctrines, likewise, it may be, hitherto unnoticed.

Necessity of explanation.

PROGRESS OF RELIGIOUS OPINIONS IN ENGLAND.

From A. D. 681 to the present time, an interval of more than eleven centuries, Christianity, in one form or another, has maintained itself as the predominant religion of the English people. Naturally, in the course of this protracted period, the ever-varying condition—social, intellectual, material—of the country, as successive generations made new acquisitions of enlightenment and liberty and wealth, effected corresponding variations in the aspect, both political and doctrinal, of the religious faith of the community. Thus we behold, in earliest times, particular articles of Christian faith and practice gathering the undivided homage of the people, and receiving sanction from the civil power, which also punishes diversity. In course of time these ancient tenets lose their hold upon the national affections; the civil sanction is transferred to other doctrines, and the civil penalties are now enforced against all opposition to the new belief. Gradually, however, these restraints upon opinion are withdrawn; existing creeds take form and practical embodiment; and further sects arise and organise and multiply, till, favoured by almost unbounded toleration, sects perpetually appear and disappear, as numerous and varied as the opinions or even as the fancies of men. Some slight review of these mutations in the national mind and in the fortunes of particular Churches seems almost essential to a satisfactory appreciation of the present state of England in regard to her religious institutions.

PROGRESS
OF RELIGIOUS
OPINIONS
IN ENGLAND.

Definitive establishment of Christianity in England.

Christianity, when introduced among the Saxons, at once assumed an organized character. This was, of course, accordant with the episcopal model to which the missionaries were themselves attached. The conversion of the king of a Saxon State was immediately followed by the elevation of his benefactor to a bishopric, the territorial boundaries of which were generally conterminat with those of the kingdom itself. In course of time, as some of the dioceses were manifestly too extensive, divisions of the larger sees were made, and additional bishoprics created. The first partition of this kind was effected by Theodore, Archbishop of Canterbury, about A.D. 680; and the Council of Hertford, held in 693, enacted, or at least affirmed, that sees should become more numerous as the number of the faithful increased. In this manner the larger ecclesiastical divisions of the country were soon settled on a permanent basis; for, with the exception of some changes made in the reign of Henry VIII., and a few of very recent origin, the present bishoprics are the same as those established in the Anglo-Saxon times. The Bishops were ostensibly nominated by the clergy of the cathedral church, but the sovereigns generally influenced, if they did not altogether monopolize, the appointments. The authority of the prelates was very considerable. They ranked with the Earl, and each of their oaths was equivalent to those of 120 peers. Apart from their spiritual jurisdiction, they sustained an important position in the conduct of civil affairs,—possessing seats in the national Witenagemot, and assisting the sheriffs in the local administration of justice.

Revenues.

The funds for the support of Christianity were derived from various sources. At first they seem to have been exclusively supplied by voluntary offerings, of which the bishops had the sole disposal.* Afterwards, upon the erection of a church or the foundation of a religious establishment, it became the custom—probably in imitation of a practice which appears to have prevailed in nearly every age and every country of the world—for the founder to devote a tenth of all his property to purposes of religion and charity. Tithes thus appear to have had their origin in voluntary payments, and as such they were, doubtless, very generally rendered in the early periods of Anglo-Saxon rule, when the payment was considered applicable both to the provision for religious worship and to the relief of the poor. It was not till the middle of the sixth century that tithes were demanded by the clergy of Christendom as a right; nor were they declared to be such by any General Council prior to that of Lateran in 1215. In England, however, it was not long before a custom so generally adopted began to be regarded, first as a religious, and then as a legal, duty; and, accordingly, the legislature in the tenth century recognized the obligation, and provided for its due discharge, first, by declaring that defaulters should be liable to spiritual censures, and, ultimately, by enacting civil penalties for disobedience. Several minor customary payments, under the various names of Church-shot, Light-shot, and Plough-alms, seem also to have gradually acquired a legislative sanction. Monasteries, and similar religious institutions, were, in general, well provided for by the endowments settled on them by their founders, and by grants and gifts continually made to them by later benefactors.

Condition of the Church subsequent to the
Norman Conquest.

For nearly 150 years immediately following the Conquest, the history of Christianity in England shows an almost continual advance of the power of the clergy and the Holy See. William the Conqueror, though personally little inclined to yield the smallest portion of his spiritual jurisdiction, nevertheless contributed materially, by steps adopted for political advantage, to augment the influence of Rome. While he himself maintained with spirit his supposed prerogatives,—not suffering any interference with the Church without his sanction, and requiring that no Pope should be received as such without his previous consent,—the various acts by which he introduced or strengthened precedents for papal intervention could not fail to be the efficacious means by which, in more perplexing times, or under less determined rulers, England would be brought to more complete dependence on the Court of Rome. Among these measures, not the least effectual was the separate ecclesiastical tribunal which he instituted for offences and disputes in which the clergy were concerned. This exclusive jurisdiction, and the further advances made in enforcing clerical celibacy, tended much to erect the priesthood into an independent power in the state, asserting, first an equal, and at last a superior, position to the civil government.

1384—1509.

Nearly every Parliament from the time of Wycliffe to the reign of Henry VIII. (1384 to 1509) adopted measures to resist pontifical supremacy; and, not restricting their hostility to Rome, they even several times suggested to the sovereign the appropriation of Church property to secular objects. Two parties hence arose in the ranks of the Reformers.—one desiring both political and doctrinal reformation, the other limiting their aims to merely secular changes.

* Kemble, ii. p. 473. Lingard, vol. i. p. 190.

From 1534 this country, therefore, may be said to have possessed a National Church; for ever since, with the brief exception which occurred in the reign of Mary, all the civil laws by which, in England, Christianity has been established and expounded, have derived their force entirely from the sanction of the native government of the state, apart from any, the slightest, interference of a foreign power.

OPINIONS
IN ENGLAND.

Establishment of a National Church.

In 1536, the Convocation passed, and the King adopted, certain Articles, by which the faith of the Church of England was, for the time, authoritatively settled. In these, the Bible and the three creeds are set forth as the foundation of belief; baptism, penance, confession to a priest, belief in the corporal presence, are declared essential to salvation; justification is said to be obtained by the union of good works with faith. Images were to be used as examples, but not as idols; saints were to be honoured, but not worshipped; the use of holy water was allowed, but its efficacy was denied; indefinite prayer was permitted for the dead; and the existence of an unspecific purgatory was affirmed.* All the clergy were directed to explain these articles to their flocks. Latin and English Bibles were to be set up in the churches; and the children of the parish were to be taught, in the mother tongue, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and the Creed.† In the following year, 1537, the King put forth a fuller exposition of the orthodox belief in the shape of a book adopted by the Convocation and entitled "The Institution of a Christian Man," and in 1543 he published, of his own authority, a second edition of this work, with certain alterations favouring the ancient doctrines. These books were, each in turn, accepted as the standard of belief: but the test by which it was attempted to secure an uniformity of faith was the "Law of the Six Articles," passed in 1539. By this law were established, (1) the doctrine of the real presence,—(2) the communion in one kind only,—(3) the perpetual obligation of vows of chastity,—(4) the utility of private masses,—(5) the celibacy of the clergy,—and (6) the necessity of auricular confession. Death by fire, and forfeiture of all possessions, were the penalties of controverting the first article; imprisonment or death the penalty of opposition to the rest, according as the opposition was withdrawn or persevered in. In 1544, the Legislature somewhat mitigated the severity of this enactment; but the number of persons who were executed under its provisions was yet very great.

Changes effected
by Henry VIII.

During the brief reign of Edward the Sixth the progress of the doctrinal Reformation was more rapid, and its character more definite. The law of the Six Articles was repealed; the celebration of private masses was prohibited; the laity were allowed the communion of the cup; marriage was permitted to the clergy; images were removed from all the churches; altars were converted to communion tables; and finally, in 1553, Forty-two Articles of Faith were issued by authority, establishing the doctrines of the Church of England nearly as they stand at present. A new Communion Service, differing but slightly from that now in use, was produced in 1547; and the English Liturgy, first introduced in 1549, and afterwards revised and somewhat altered, was confirmed by Parliament in 1552. To spread the new belief among the people, measures were adopted to promote and regulate the practice of preaching, which began to be a very powerful means of influencing popular opinion. Bishops were required to preach four times a year—to stimulate the parish clergy in this exercise—and to ordain for the ministry none who were unable to perform this necessary duty. As, however, the supply of preachers was, for some time, unavoidably deficient, a Book of Homilies, composed in chief by Cranmer, was appointed to be used in churches, together with the Paraphrase of Erasmus. The singing of psalms and hymns from Scripture was also now, for the first time, authorized.

Mary I.

Mary, a sincere and zealous Romanist, succeeding to the sovereign authority at a time when the almost universal voice of the community affirmed it as the duty of the civil ruler to decide the nation's creed and to enforce compliance, naturally at once reversed her brother's policy—restored the former faith and practices—and put in energetic force against the Protestants the persecuting principles which they themselves so generally sanctioned. All the acts of Edward touching on religion were repealed; the doctrine of the corporal presence in the mass was re-affirmed; the Prayer Book and the Catechism were pronounced heretical; the celibacy of the clergy was prescribed, and every married clergyman ejected from his cure; severe enactments against heresy were passed; and a sort of inquisition to discover heretics was instituted. All the prominent reformers either fled across the sea or suffered in England at the stake. About 300 had already paid for their opinions with their lives when Mary's brief reign ended in 1558.

Elizabeth.

Elizabeth at once replaced the Church in the position it had occupied before the reign of Mary. Parliament again affirmed the sovereign's supremacy as head of the Church, and punished with extreme severity all those who questioned this prerogative.* In 1559 the Act of Uniformity† restored with little variance the Book of Common Prayer, and made it penal to be absent without reasonable cause from a church where it was used. In 1563 the second Book of Homilies was printed, and the Larger Catechism sanctioned. And the Articles of Religion—which, in 1563, had been subscribed (then numbering thirty-eight) by the Convocation—were, in 1571, adopted in their present shape and number, ratified by the Queen, and confirmed by Act of Parliament.‡ Thus, Protestant Christianity was re-established as the national religion; and severe coercive measures were enacted to secure unanimous profession and obedience.

Progress of Puritanism.

No sooner, however, had the victory been thus completed over one of the two great parties hostile to the settlement effected in the reign of Edward, than a vigorous and long protracted conflict with the other party was renewed. Both for their numbers and sincere activity these new antagonists were formidable foes. As, in deciding on the changes which should be admitted, Cranmer and the other founders of the Church displayed the cautious policy of statesmen rather than the pauseless ardour of religious partizans—more anxious to conciliate opponents and secure the utmost innovation practicable, than to contend uncompromisingly for all the progress they might think desirable—it followed, almost of necessity, that multitudes, deriving their opinions from the exercise of private judgment on the Scriptures recently unsealed to them, and urged, by natural reaction, to the utmost distance from the Church of Rome, would find their ardent expectations of the new establishment unrealized, and would lament as well the absence from its constitution and its ritual of much which they desired as the continued presence there of much which they disliked.

* The Queen preferred the title of "Supreme Governor" of the Church to "Supreme Head." All the bishops except one refused to take the oath, and were in consequence deprived; 173 of the inferior clergy imitated their refusal with a similar result.

The Puritans, were not wholly presbyterian. The natural tendency of the religious movement in the public mind was to develop constantly new theories of ecclesiastical government, each fresh advance distinguished by a nearer approach to a democratic system. Although the Presbyterians, therefore, for a long time formed the vast majority of the opponents of the Church establishment, opinions much less favourable than theirs to clerical authority and State control in matters of religion soon began to gain adherents. Most conspicuous among the sects which entertained such notions were the Independents, who, rejecting equally the presbyterian and episcopal machinery, maintained that every individual congregation is a separate Church, complete and perfect in itself, and altogether independent of external oversight. They also held that the province of the civil magistrate did not extend to spiritual things, the State possessing no infallible means of distinguishing truth from error, and the true religion being best discovered and established by the unforced zeal of its disciples.—Similar opinions were maintained by the Baptists, who, about this period, began to grow into importance.

Rise of the Independents.

Baptists.

The reign of Charles the First beheld the crisis of the controversy. All the various severe repressive measures which were put in force proved ineffectual to check the spread of puritanic principles, and only served to render yet more bitter the hostility of their professors towards the ruling hierarchy. At last this long protracted opposition triumphed. Parliament, in 1641, abolished the Court of High Commission, and deprived the bishops of votes in the House of Peers. In 1643 episcopacy was itself abolished, and the chief direction of the Church intrusted to the "Westminster Assembly," a body chosen by the Parliament, and consisting of 120 clergymen and 30 laymen. This assembly, where the Presbyterians predominated, issued a Confession of Faith, a larger and a shorter Catechism, a form of Presbyterian Church government, and a "Directory" for public worship. Parliament, in 1645, suppressed the Prayer Book, and enjoined the use of the Directory—an outline service, which each minister was authorized to supplement at his discretion. Part only of the Confession (which was Calvinistic) was adopted by the legislature; and the form of government was not established, save in Lancashire and London, and not there without the safeguard of an ultimate appeal to Parliament. An ordinance was passed in 1644 by which the clergy were required to take the Covenant, and thus engage to uphold Presbyterianism; 3,000 of them refused, and were ejected from their benefices, being allowed one fifth part of their income for their future maintenance. In the absence of episcopacy, the discipline of the Church was administered by the Assembly, who ordained and appointed ministers. In this reign the Quakers first appeared, originated by George Fox.

Charles I.

By Cromwell's assumption of supreme authority in 1649 the influence of the Presbyterians was much diminished. The power of ordination was removed from the Assembly and intrusted to a committee of thirty-eight persons of different sects called Triers (nine of whom were laymen), who examined all the nominees for ministerial functions. In Wales, itinerant preachers were employed by a Commission out of revenues at its disposal. Tithes were continued to the clergy; but the proceeds of the bishop's lands, and tenths and first fruits, were made over to the Commissioners, with the design of aiding from the fund thus raised the stipends of the smaller livings.

Rise of the Quakers.

The Protectorate.

The principle of toleration was first recognized in this administration; free exercise of their religion being guaranteed to all "who professed faith in God "in Christ Jesus;" and it was further added, "that none be compelled to conform to the public religion by penalties or otherwise, but that endea“vours be used to win them by sound doctrine and the example of a good conversation.”

The Restoration.¹

But the change in the national religion which was thus effected during the Interregnum, by the advance towards a Puritan establishment, was nearly as evanescent as was that which had been caused in the reign of Mary by the retrogression towards the ancient faith. With the lasting restoration of the monarchy, episcopacy also was enduringly restored. The ascent of Charles the Second to the vacant throne in 1660 seemed to have effaced from history the period of the Great Rebellion, and the Episcopal Church regained the dominant position, fenced by penal statutes, it had occupied in the days of Laud.

A previous professed endeavour to conciliate the Nonconformists failed. Like Mary, like Elizabeth, like James the First, so Charles the Second also, on the eve of his accession, promised tenderness to conscientious scruples; but the Savoy conference between the Nonconformists and Episcopalians, convened pursuant to this promise, ended in no tangible result. An Act of Uniformity, more stringent than the similar enactment of Elizabeth, was passed in 1662, by which all ministers refusing* to assent to everything contained in the Book of Common Prayer, as recently amended, were to be ejected from their benefices on the next St. Bartholomew's Day; and accordingly 2,000 ministers were then deprived of their preferments. Several other statutes, varying in rigour, were enacted in this reign against the Nonconformists, for the purpose of protecting the Established Church. In 1661, the Corporation Act excluded all dissenters from municipal appointments. Two Conventicle Acts, in 1664 and 1670, made it penal for five persons, in addition to the occupiers of a house, to assemble for religious worship; and in 1665 the Five Mile Act imposed a penalty of 40*l.* on every Nonconformist minister who came within five miles of any corporate town, and also upon all, whether ministers or laymen, who, if not frequenting the Established Church, should teach in a public or private school. In 1673, the Test Act, aimed at Roman Catholics and Nonconformists equally, excluded them from civil offices and military commands. In 1678, in consequence of Oates's plot, the Roman Catholics were prohibited from sitting in Parliament. The King made several attempts to grant a toleration, but as these endeavours were supposed by Parliament to spring from a desire to favour Roman Catholics, they uniformly failed.* Still, towards the termination of this reign, a feeling of the impolicy of treating harshly nonconforming Protestants began to be displayed; and gradually the sentiment extended through the nation that a trivial diversity in modes of worship might be well allowed them without danger to the national establishment.

James II.

This feeling was much strengthened in the reign of James, when the Nonconformists declined to receive the toleration which the King, by an illegal stretch of his prerogative, held out to them. Several of the bishops, grateful for assistance rendered at a critical conjuncture, entertained a plan of comprehension, which, proceeding on an alteration of some portions of the liturgy, might bring again within the pale of the Established Church the mass of those who had abandoned her communion. In the troubles and excitement of the times, however, no advance was made in this direction; but a disposition to indulgence was excited in the ruling party, not unlikely to be fruitful when a favorable opportunity occurred. This opportunity was soon presented, when King

* It is stated that above 8,000 Protestant dissenters were imprisoned in the reign of Charles the Second; and that as many as 60,000 had in various ways, in the same period, suffered for religion. See Short's History of the Church of England, p. 559.

James the Second, partly for political and partly for religious causes, was, in 1688, expelled the throne. The claim of the Dissenters to a milder treatment could not well be disregarded, either by the monarch they had helped to elevate, or by the Church they had assisted to defend. Accordingly, the Toleration Act* bestowed, on all but Roman Catholics and such as denied the doctrine of the Trinity, full liberty of worship, upon paying tithes and other dues, taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and certifying their places of worship to the bishops or the justices of the peace: Dissenting ministers being also required to sign thirty-five and a half of the Articles of the Established Church. The scheme for a comprehension was proceeded with, but proved abortive. A commission, appointed by the King, suggested sundry alterations in the liturgy; but these the Lower House of Convocation was unwilling to concede, and this, the last, endeavour to procure by comprehension greater uniformity was finally abandoned, and has never since that period been renewed.

The Revolution.

The Revolution settled the Established Church upon its present basis. Several alterations, have indeed, been since effected in its relative position towards other sects; but not the slightest change has been effected in the Church itself, in its doctrines, polity, or worship. The principal effect of the Toleration Act was on the character of the Church as a national establishment. Before this statute, no discrepancy was deemed conceivable between the Church and the community: the one was looked upon as altogether co-extensive with the other. To dissent from the belief or mode of worship sanctioned by supreme ecclesiastical authority was much the same as to rebel against the civil power; and all who placed themselves in this predicament were either to be brought by fines and other punishments, to yield conformity, or, if intractable, were to be burnt or banished, and the absolute identity of Church and Nation thus restored. The Toleration Act in part destroyed this theory. The Episcopal Church was still considered "national," as being recognised as orthodox by national authority—endowed by law with the exclusive right to tithes and similar involuntary contributions—gifted with a special portion of the State's support—and subject generally to the State's control; but those who differed from her creeds and formularies were allowed, while aiding to support the legal faith, to worship in the way they deemed most scriptural and proper, subject for a time to some disqualifying statutes which have gradually been repealed or modified.†

Final settlement of the Established Church.

* 1 W. & M. c.18.

† The principal of these were, the Conventicle Act, 22 Car. II. c.1. (repealed in 1689), which made it penal to attend a Nonconformist meeting of more than five persons; the Corporation Act, 13 Car. II. c.1. (repealed in 1828), which disqualified for offices in corporations all who should decline to take the sacrament according to the rites of the Established Church, and to swear that it is in no case lawful to take arms against the king; the Test Act, 25 Car. II. c.2. (repealed in 1828), which disqualified from holding any place of trust or public office those who should refuse to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the Lord's Supper in accordance with the usage of the Church of England; the Act of 13 & 14 Car. II. c.4., by which dissenters were prohibited from keeping schools (modified in 1799, by allowing them to teach upon taking the usual oaths and subscribing the usual declaration); the provision (repealed in 1813) in the Toleration Act, exempting from its benefits all persons who denied the Trinity; the Occasional Conformity Act, 10 Anne, c.2. (repealed in 1718), by which no person was eligible for public employment unless he entirely conformed; the Schism Act, 12 Anne, st. II. c.7. (repealed in 1718), by which all schoolmasters were to be licensed by the bishops, and to be strict conformists.

The chief disabilities which, for the safeguard of the Established Church, are still imposed on other bodies, are the following:—all persons holding certain responsible civil and military offices, and all ecclesiastical and collegiate persons, preachers, teachers, and schoolmasters, high constables, and practitioners of the law, are required to promise, by oath or affirmation, allegiance to the Crown, and acknowledge its ecclesiastical supremacy, and also to abjure allegiance to the descendants of the Pretender, and to maintain the Act of Settlement.—No Dissenter can hold the mastership of a college or other endowed school, unless endowed since 1688, for the immediate benefit of Protestant Dissenters.—All meetings for religious worship of more than twenty persons besides the family, if held in a building not certified to the Registrar General, are subject to a penalty of 20*l*.—Every person appointed to any office, for admission to which it was necessary under the Test Act to receive the sacrament according to the custom of the Church of England, is to make a declaration "upon the true faith of a Christian" that he will never exercise any power, authority, or influence obtained by virtue of such office, to injure or disturb the English Church or its bishops and clergy. Seceding Churches.

The era of the Revolution, therefore, is the birthday of religious sects in England. For a long time previously they had been struggling into being; but from henceforth they obtained embodied life. The hasty glance bestowed upon the various phases of the land's religious history will not be deemed superfluous, if it serve to indicate with any clearness through what intellectual conflicts and political convulsions most of the extant varieties of creed have worked their way towards a separate embodiment and legal recognition. But from 1688 the history of our religion, ceasing to be identical with the history of the State, must not, as formerly, be looked for in the national annals or the pages of the statute book, but in the records of each individual church. A brief view, therefore, of the origin and course and principal peculiarities of these seceding bodies, will complete the sketch by which it seemed advisable to introduce the denominational statistics. In this view I purpose to bestow the chief attention upon Protestant seceding churches; as requiring, from the little that is popularly known concerning them, a fulness of explanation which the notoriety attaching to the leading features of the Church of England and the Church of Rome makes quite unnecessary in the case of those communities.

1688-1851.

From this proposed review it will be seen that four of the existing sects,—the Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, and Society of Friends,—derive their origin directly from the conflict of opinions which produced and followed the Reformation.—The prolonged reaction which succeeded to the Puritan enthusiasm was not, as we shall see, disturbed till near the middle of the eighteenth century, when a marvellous revival of religious sentiment broke in upon the slumbers of the general Church, and in the form of Methodism, came to be condensed into the largest of the nonconforming bodies.—Next, as the author of a new belief, a Swedish noble and philosopher affirms himself to be divinely authorized to publish a fresh revelation both of truths communicated to himself by angels, and of truths before concealed beneath the hidden meaning of the Scriptures, but made manifest to him.—Towards the termination of the century, the patriarch of Methodism quits the world and leaves the vast community which hitherto had been consolidated by his influence and skill, a prey to discords, which, recurring at repeated intervals, detach considerable sections from the parent body,—this, however, scarcely pausing in its growth.—In recent days, the startling oratory of a Scottish minister convinces many that the prophesied millennial advent is at hand; and a church at once is founded claiming to possess the apostolic gifts which are to be exhibited upon the eve of such a consummation.—More recent still, and more remarkable, another claimant of celestial inspiration has appeared across the Atlantic; and the book of the prophet Mormon, like another Koran, is attracting its believers even from this country, whence continually little bands are voyaging to join, at the city of the Great Salt Lake, beneath the Rocky Mountains, the “Church of the Latter-day Saints.”

principal magistrates, appearing at any Dissenting place of worship with the insignia of office, are disabled from holding any official situation.—Persons professing the Roman Catholic religion, must, in order to sit in parliament, or vote at parliamentary elections, or become members of lay corporations, take an oath abjuring any intention to subvert the Church establishment, and another, promising never to make use of any privilege to disturb the Protestant succession or the Protestant government. The latter oath must be taken to enable them to exercise any franchise or civil right, and to hold any office from which they were excluded by the Test Act. No Roman Catholic can present to any benefice, nor hold the office of Regent of the United Kingdom, Lord High Chancellor, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, High Commissioner of the General Assembly of Scotland, nor any office in the Church or the ecclesiastical courts, or in the universities, colleges, or public schools.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The doctrines of the Church of England are embodied in her Articles and Liturgy: the Book of Common Prayer prescribes her mode of worship; and the Canons of 1603 contain, so far as the clergy are concerned, her code of discipline.

Doctrines.

Bishops, Priests, and Deacons are the ministerial orders known to the episcopal establishment of England. In the Bishop lies the power of ordination of inferior ministers, who otherwise have no authority to dispense the sacraments or preach. Deacons, when ordained, may, licensed by the bishop, preach and administer the rite of baptism; Priests by this ceremony are further empowered to administer the Lord's Supper, and to hold a benefice with cure of souls.

Orders.

Besides these orders, there are also several dignities sustained by bishops and by priests; as (1) Archbishops, each of whom is chief of a certain number of bishops, who are usually ordained by him; (2) Deans and Chapters, who, attached to all cathedrals, are supposed to form the council of the bishop, and to aid him with advice; (3) Archdeacons, who perform a kind of episcopal functions in a certain portion of a diocese; (4) Rural Deans, who are assistants to the bishop in a smaller sphere.

Dignities.

These various orders and dignities of the Church have all (except cathedral deans) attached to them peculiar territorial jurisdictions. The theory of the Establishment demands that every clergyman should have his ministrations limited to a specific district or Parish; and, when England first became divided into parishes, the number of churches would exactly indicate the number of such parishes,—each parish being just that portion of the country, the inhabitants of which were meant to be accommodated in the newly-erected church. In course of years, however, either prompted by the growth of population or by their own capricious piety, proprietors erected and endowed, within the mother-parishes, fresh edifices which were either chapels of ease to the mother church or the centres of new districts, soon allowed by custom to become distinct ecclesiastical divisions known as “chapelries.” In this way nearly all the soil of England became parcelled out in ecclesiastical divisions, varying greatly, both in size and population, as might be expected from the isolated and unsystematic efforts out of which they sprung. Of late years, as new churches have been built, some further subdivisions of the larger parishes have been effected by the bishops and commissioners empowered by acts of parliament. The number of ecclesiastical districts and new parishes thus formed was, at the time of the census, 1,255, containing a population of 4,832,491.

Territorial Divisions:

Parishes.

In the ancient Saxon period, ten such parishes constituted a Rural Deanery. The growth, however, of the population, and the increased number of churches, have now altered this proportion, and the rural deaneries are diverse in extent. At present there are 463 such divisions.

Rural Deaneries.

Archdeaconries, as territorial divisions, had their origin soon after the Norman Conquest, previous to which archdeacons were but members of cathedral chapters. Several new archdeaconries have been created within recent years, by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, by virtue of the act of 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 77. The total number now is 71.

Archdeaconries.

Bishoprics or Dioceses are almost as ancient as the introduction here of Christianity. Of those now extant, all (excepting seven) were formed in Saxon or in Dioceses.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

British times. The Saxon bishoprics were generally co-extensive with the several kingdoms. Of the excepted seven, five were created by Henry the Eighth, out of a portion of the confiscated property of the suppressed religious houses, and the other two (viz. Manchester and Ripon), were created by the Act of 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 77. There are two Archbishoprics or Provinces: Canterbury, comprehending 21 dioceses, and York, comprising the remaining seven. The population of the former in 1851 was 12,785,048; that of the latter 5,285,687.

Patronage.

Incumbents of parishes are appointed, subject to the approval of the bishop, by patrons, who may be either corporate bodies or private persons. Of the 11,728 benefices in England and Wales, 1,144 are in the gift of the crown; 1,853 in that of the bishops; 938 in that of cathedral chapters and other dignitaries; 770 in that of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the colleges of Eton, Winchester, &c.; 931 in that of the ministers of mother-churches; and the residue (6,092) in that of private persons. Incumbents are of three kinds; rectors, vicars, and perpetual curates. Rectors are recipients of all the parochial tithes; vicars and perpetual curates are the delegates of the tithe-impropriators, and receive a portion only. These appointments are for life. The ordinary curates are appointed each by the incumbent who desires their aid.

Revenues.

The income of the Church of England is derived from the following sources; lands, tithes, church-rates, pew-rents, Easter offerings, and surplice fees (i. e. fees for burials, baptisms, &c.) The distribution of these revenues may be inferred from the state of things in 1831, when it appeared to be as follows:—

Bishops - - -	181,631
Deans and chapters - -	360,095
Parochial clergy - - -	3,251,159
Church-rates - - -	500,000
	£4,292,885

In the course of the twenty years which have elapsed since 1831, no fewer than 2,029 new churches have been built, and the value of Church property has much increased; so that, after the considerable addition which must be made to the above amount, in order to obtain an accurate view of the total income of the Church in 1851, it is probable that it will be considerably upwards of 5,000,000*l.* per annum.

Stipends of the Clergy.

The number of beneficed clergy in 1831 was 10,718: the average gross income, therefore, of each would be about 300*l.* per annum. At the same date there were 5,230 curates, the total amount of whose stipends was 424,695*l.*, yielding an average of 81*l.* per annum to each curate. But, as many incumbents possessed more than 300*l.* a year, and some curates more than 81*l.* a year, there must evidently have been some incumbents and curates whose remuneration was below those sums respectively.

Augmentations of small livings.

For the purpose of raising the stipends of incumbents of the smaller livings, the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty annually receive the sum of 14,000*l.*, the produce of First Fruits and Tithes; and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners apply to the same object a portion of the surplus proceeds of episcopal and capitular estates.

The progress of the Church of England has, in recent times, been very rapid; and conspicuously so within the twenty years just terminated. Latterly, a sentiment appears to have been strongly prevalent, that the relief of spiritual destitution must not be exclusively devolved upon the State; that Christians in their individual, no less than in their organized, capacity, have duties to discharge in ministering to the land's religious wants. Accordingly, a spirit of benevolence has been increasingly diffused; and private liberality is now displaying fruits, in daily rising churches, almost as abundant as in ancient times—distinguished, also, advantageously, from earlier charity, by being, it may fairly be assumed, the offspring of a more enlightened zeal, proceeding from a wider circle of contributors. The following statistics will exhibit this more clearly:—

In 1831, the number of churches and chapels of the Church of England amounted to 11,825. The number in 1851, as returned to the Census Office, was 13,854; exclusive of 223 described as being “not separate buildings,” or as “used also for secular purposes;” thus showing an increase, in the course of 20 years, of more than two thousand churches. Probably the increase is still larger, really, as it can hardly be expected that the last returns were altogether perfect. The greater portion of this increase is attributable to the self-extending power of the Church,—the State not having, in the twenty years, contributed in aid of private benefactions, more than 511,385*l.* towards the erection of 386 churches. If we assume the average cost of each new edifice to be about 3,000*l.* $, the total sum expended in this interval (exclusive of considerable sums devoted to the restoration of old churches) will be 6,087,000*l.* The chief addition has occurred, as was to be expected and desired, in thickly-peopled districts, where the rapid increase of inhabitants has rendered such additional accommodation most essential. Thus, in Cheshire, Lancashire, Middlesex, Surrey, and the West Riding of Yorkshire, the increase of churches has been so much greater than the increase of the population, that the proportion between the accommodation and the number of inhabitants is now considerably more favourable than in 1831. (Table A.)

TABLE A.

County.	Population.		Number of Churches (separate Buildings).		Proportion of Churches to Population.
	1831.	1851.	1831.	1851.	1831.	1851.
CHESHIRE - -	334,391	453,725	142	244	One Church to 2,355	One Church to 1868

YORK (West Riding) -	984,609	1,325,495	287	556	3,431	2384

It is true, indeed, that in the whole of England and Wales collectively the proportion shows no increase, but a decrease—being, in 1831, one church to every 1,175 inhabitants, while in 1851 it was one church to every 1,296; but the latter proportion is not inconsistent with the supposition that, in consequence of better distribution of the churches through the country, the accommodation in reality is greater now than was the case in 1831. But this must be more fully treated in a subsequent part of this Report.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The following view of the periods in which the existing structures were erected, will display, to some extent, the comparative increase in the several decennial intervals of the present century. Of the 14,077 existing churches, chapels, and other buildings belonging to the Church of England, there were built—

Before 1801	-	-	-	-	9,667
Between 1801 and 1811	-	-	-	-	55
„ 1811 and 1821	-	-	-	-	97
„ 1821 and 1831	-	-	-	-	276
„ 1831 and 1841	-	-	-	-	667
„ 1841 and 1851	-	-	-	-	1,197
Dates not mentioned	-	-	-	-	2,118

This does not, indeed, with strict exactness, show the real number of churches built in each of these decennial intervals; for, possibly, some few, erected formerly, have been replaced by other and larger edifices, which would thus perhaps be mentioned with the later date. The tendency is, therefore, slightly, to augment unduly the numbers in the later, and unduly to diminish the numbers in the earlier periods; but this disturbing influence has probably been more than counteracted by the cases where the date has been left unmentioned. The statement, therefore, is perhaps a tolerably fair criterion of the progress of church-building in the nineteenth century. If the preceding estimate be accurate respecting the number of churches built since 1831, and if it be assumed, as is most likely, that the greater portion of the 2,118 churches, of which the dates of erection are not specified, were built before 1801, leaving perhaps 60 or 70 built in the period 1801–31; it will follow that, from 1801 to 1831, there must have been above 500 new erections, at a cost, upon the average, of probably 6,000*l.* apiece, being altogether 3,000,000*l.*, of which amount, 1,152,044*l.* was paid from parliamentary grants, originated in 1818. Subject to the above-mentioned qualification respecting the dates of churches renovated or enlarged, the whole result of the efforts made in the present century may be represented thus:—

Periods.	Number of Churches built.	Estimated Cost.
		Total.	Contributed by
			Public Funds.	Private Benefaction.
		£	£	£
1801 to 1831 - -	500	3,000,000	1,152,044	1,847,956
1831 to 1851 - -	2,029	6,087,000	511,385	5,575,615
1801 to 1851 - -	2,529	9,087,000	1,663,429	7,423,571

In the 13,051 returns which furnished information as to sittings, accommodation is stated for 4,922,412 persons. Making an estimate for 1,026 churches, for which no particulars respecting sittings were supplied, it seems that the total accommodation in 14,077 churches was for 5,317,915 persons. The number of attendants on the Census-Sunday (after an estimated addition on account of 939 churches, from which no returns of the attendants were received) was as follows:—Morning, 2,541,244; Afternoon, 1,890,764; Evening, 860,543.

INTRODUCTION.

When the Reformation had successfully (at least in part) established the important principle that the Bible, interpreted by individual judgment, is the only rule of faith, it followed necessarily that of the many minds applied to the investigation of the book thus opened for their study, some were found to differ from each other and the rest respecting its essential meaning and requirements. Naturally, also, those who held identical or closely similar opinions upon any of the points of difference were gradually led to connect themselves together in more or less intimate association. Thus were formed the Lutheran, the Calvinian, and the Anglican Establishments; and thus, when liberty of separate combination was obtained in England, various churches, differing on various points of faith and order, were originated as distinct ecclesiastical communities. The principal diversities which thus obtained (in combination, more or less, with other differences,) a permanent embodiment, may be included and arranged in three considerable classes:—

- I. Diversities respecting the essential DOCTRINES of the Gospel.
- II Diversities respecting the RITES AND CEREMONIES enjoined. by the Scriptures.
- III. Diversities respecting the scriptural ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH

1. PRESBYTERIANS.

TERIANS.

Origin.

The origin of Presbyterianism is referable to the period just succeeding the first triumphs of the principles of the Reformation. When those principles had so far triumphed as to have detached considerable numbers from the Romish faith, it then became essential, in order to provide for the spiritual oversight of these new converts, to establish some ecclesiastical machinery in lieu of that they had forsaken when forsaking the communion of the Church of Rome; and it was therefore necessary to investigate the subject of Church Government as indicated in the Scriptures. Accordingly, Calvin, when invited to assume the post of ecclesiastical legislator for the city of Geneva, bent his mind to the construction of a perfect system of church polity in harmony with the supposed directions or suggestions of the Bible. The result of his enquiries was the production of a code of laws which have since been universally recognized as the basis of the Presbyterian system. The fundamental principles of this system are,—the existence in the church of but one order of ministers, all equal (spoken of in Scripture under various appellations held to be synonymous, as ‘bishops,’ ‘presbyters,’ and ‘elders’), and the power of these ministers—assembled, with a certain proportion of the laity, in local and in general synods—to decide all questions of church government and discipline arising in particular congregations.

The Scottish Kirk adopts the Confession, Catechism, and Directory prepared by the Westminster Assembly as its standards of belief and worship. Its discipline is administered by a series of four courts or assemblies. (1) The Kirk Session is the lowest court, and is composed of the minister of a parish and a variable number of lay elders, appointed from time to time by the session itself. (2) The Presbytery consists of representatives from a certain number of contiguous parishes, associated together in one district. The representatives are the ministers of all such parishes and one lay elder from each. This assembly has the power of ordaining ministers and licensing probationers to preach before their ordination: it also investigates charges respecting the conduct of members, approves of new communicants, and pronounces excommunication against offenders. An appeal, however, lies to the next superior court; viz. (3) The Provincial Synod, which comprises several presbyteries, and is constituted by the ministers and elders by whom these presbyteries themselves were last composed. (4) The General Assembly is the highest court, and is composed of representatives (ministers and elders) from the presbyteries, royal burghs, and universities of Scotland, to the number (at present) of 363; of which number rather more than two fifths are laymen.

The National Church of Scotland has three presbyteries in England; that of London, containing five congregations,—that of Liverpool and Manchester, containing three congregations,—and that of the North of England, containing eight congregations.

Various considerable secessions have from time to time occurred in Scotland from the National Church, of bodies which, while holding Presbyterian sentiments, dissent from the particular mode in which they are developed by the Established Kirk, especially protesting against the mode in which church patronage is administered, and against the undue interference of the civil power. The principal of these seceding bodies are,—the “United Presbyterian Church,” and the “Free Church of Scotland,” the former being an amalgamation (effected in 1847) of the “Secession Church” (which separated in 1732) with the “Relief Synod” (which seceded in 1752); and the latter having been constituted in 1843.

The “United Presbyterian Church” has five presbyteries in England, containing seventy-six congregations; of which, however, fourteen are locally in Scotland, leaving the number locally in England 62.

The “Free Church of Scotland” has no ramifications, under that name, in England; but various Presbyterian congregations which accord in all respects with that community, and which, before the disruption of 1843, were in union with the Established Kirk, compose a separate Presbyterian body under the appellation of the “Presbyterian Church in England,” having, in this portion of Great Britain, seven presbyteries and eighty-three congregations.

Any more extended notice of these three communities will more appropriately appear as an introduction to that portion of the Census publication which refers exclusively to Scotland.

In England.

The supremacy of the Independents in the army, in the time of the Commonwealth, prevented the enforcement of the system universally or stringently; and when the restoration of King Charles the Second was effected, the entire episcopal régime was re-established in its full integrity,—the Presbyterians not being able to obtain, as a compromise, even that modified synodical episcopacy, as designed by Archbishop Usher, to which they expressed themselves not indisposed to yield. The Act of Uniformity was passed, and 2,000 ministers were forced to quit the communion of the Church of England.

In 1691, a formal coalescence was accomplished between the Presbyterian and Congregational ministers of London, and at that time, and for nearly 30 years succeeding, it seems clear that the doctrinal tenets of the two bodies were the same, and thoroughly in harmony with the doctrinal portion of the Articles of the Church of England. But about a century ago, a most important alteration seems to have been silently effected in the doctrines held by English Presbyterian churches; and instead of the Calvinistic tenets held so firmly by the Puritans, the later Presbyterians began to cherish, most of them Arminian, many of them Unitarian, sentiments. Those who adhered to the standards of the Westminster Assembly are now either merged in Congregational churches, or connected with the Scottish Presbyterians. The rest, possessing neither presbytery, synod, nor assembly, and departing widely from the doctrines of the Westminster Confession, can be scarcely now denominated "Presbyterians" at all,—their only point of concord with that body being the simple manner, common to nearly all dissenters, of conducting public worship.† Therefore, in the tabular returns which form the body of this volume, the term "Presbyterian" will be restricted to its ancient meaning, and all churches formed of persons who do not receive the doctrine of the Trinity, (excepting General Baptists,) will be found included in the single class of "Unitarians."

1. PRESBY-
TERIANS.

2. INDEPENDENTS, OR CONGREGATIONALISTS.

The great distinctive principle on which is based the separate existence of that large and prosperous body called, indifferently, sometimes "Independents," sometimes "Congregationalists," has reference to the scriptural constitution of a Christian church. Rejecting equally the episcopal and presbyterian model, Congregational dissenters hold a "Church" to be synonymous with a "select congregation;" and a Christian church to be therefore a congregation of true believers. They assert that Scripture yields no evidence to justify the application of the term (ἐκκλησία) to any aggregate of individual assemblies, whether such aggregate consist of all that may be found within a definite locality, (as in the case of every National Church), or of all that manifest an uniformity of faith and discipline (as in every representative Free Church). In confirmation of this view, they quote the language of the Bible, where the plural—"churches"—is, they say, invariably employed when more than one particular association is referred to, saving only where the reference is to the invisible and universal church.

INDEPENDENTS
OR CONGREGA-TIONALISTS.

Church Government.

The personal composition of the congregation thus supposed to be the only proper "church" is, as already mentioned, that of a society of "true believers;" that is, persons who both openly profess their faith in the essential doctrines of the Gospel and evince the earnestness of their belief by a corresponding change of disposition and demeanour.

To express the total freedom of the body from exterior control, the term "Independency" is used; to convey the idea that every member of the church participates in its administration, "Congregationalism," a more modern appellation, is adopted.

Two descriptions only of church officers are viewed as warranted by scriptural authority; viz., bishops (or pastors) and deacons; the former instituted to promote the spiritual, and the latter to advance the temporal, welfare of the church. The various expressions, "bishop," "elder," "pastor," "presbyter," employed in Scripture, are employed, it is affirmed, indifferently and interchangeably, intending always a precisely similar office. Whether there should be in any congregation more than one such bishop, is conceived to be a matter undecided by the Scriptures, and left to the discretion of the church itself. The only valid "call" to the pastorate is held to be an invitation to that office by an individual church; and where a person is invited thus, no licence, as in Presbyterian, nor ordination, as in Episcopal churches, is considered to be requisite in order to confer authority to preach or to administer the sacraments. Still, after this election by an individual church, an ordination of the chosen minister by ministers of neighbouring churches is esteemed a fitting introduction to the pastoral office; and the custom always has been general, throughout the Independent body, of inaugurating newly chosen pastors at a special service, when they make profession of their orthodox belief and receive fraternal recognition from the other pastors present. But such ordination is not looked upon as imparting pastoral authority; this flows exclusively from the election by a church, without whose previous sanction ordination is regarded as of no avail. And, in the selection of its minister, a church is not restricted to a special class prepared by education for the office: any person who, by Christian character and aptitude for preaching, so commends himself as to receive an invitation to the ministry, is recognized as being lawfully a pastor. Yet is an educated ministry considered very desirable; and, practically, the majority of Congregational ministers in modern times receive preparatory training at the various Theological Academies and Colleges belonging to the general body. But while scriptural authority is thus asserted for the existence of a ministerial order, no restriction to this order of the exclusive privilege of preaching is contended for; religious exhortation is permitted and encouraged in all those who, having gifts appropriate, feel prompted so to use them.

The theory which Independents cherish of the scriptural model of a Christian church induces them, of course, to look with disapproval on all State Establishments of religion. Hostile, as already intimated, to the slightest interference from external bodies—even where, as in the Presbyterian communities, the partly popular assembly may be not unfairly taken to reflect with faithfulness the best ideas and abilities of all the individual churches—Independents are inevitably still more hostile to the interference of a secular and miscellaneous body like the national parliament, to whose decision they assert all questions of dispute in national establishments must actually or virtually be referred. And not alone upon the ground of interference with self-government do Independents disapprove of national churches: even if the State were to allow the fullest freedom and confine its operations to the mere provision of the necessary funds for public worship, there would still remain insuperable conscientious scruples springing from their notions of the impropriety of all endowments for religious purposes. Religion, they contend, should be committed, for its maintenance and propagation, to the natural affection of its votaries.

Although the Congregational body thus consists of many wholly independent churches, unamenable to any higher court or jurisdiction than themselves, and disavowing all subscription to confessions, creeds, or articles of merely human composition, it is nevertheless (according to its eulogists), distinguished in a singular degree by uniformity of faith and practice. From the period of its origin to the present time, no memorable separation of a part of this community from the remainder has occurred; and the doctrines preached when Independency was first announced in England were the same as those now heard from nearly every Congregational pulpit.

A convocation of this nature met, in 1658, at the Savoy, and published an epitome of faith and order as obtaining then among the Independent churches; and in 1831 was founded the “Congregational Union of England and Wales,” a delegated conference of ministers and laymen, meeting twice a year for consultation on the state and prospects of the body, and for such co-operative action as can be adopted for its welfare without violation of the principle of Independency. The constitution of the Union, therefore, provides that it “shall not in any case assume a legislative authority, or become a court of appeal.” The Independents think that by these voluntary councils they obtain the benefits without the disadvantages of legal combination: unity, fraternity, and common action are, they say, abundantly secured, while no church feels the irritating fetters of a forced conformity.

The doctrines of the Congregational churches are almost identical with those embodied in the Articles of the Established Church, interpreted according to their Calvinistic meaning. As Independents do not recognize the advantage of subscription to a formal creed, this inference is drawn from general reputation rather than from any collocation of authentic written standards. Reference, however, to the "Declaration of Faith, Order and Discipline," issued by the Congregational Union in 1833,—which, though not binding upon any of the churches, is believed to be dissented from by none,—will furnish ample evidence of this substantial harmony.

INDEPENDENTS
TIONALIST

The origin of Independency is referable to the latter portion of the sixteenth century. It is probable that some conventicles were secretly established soon after the accession of Elizabeth, but the first prominent advocate of congregational principles appeared in 1580 in the person of Robert Brown, a man of ancient family, related to Lord Treasurer Burleigh. Zealous and impetuous of spirit, he diffused his sentiments by preaching from place to place, principally in the county of Norfolk. After residing for three years in Zealand, where he formed an Independent church, he returned to England in 1585, and again itinerated through the country with considerable success. At length, having suffered thirty-two incarcerations in as many different prisons, he conformed to the Established Church, and obtained the rectory of Oundle. But his followers rapidly increased, so much so, that an act of parliament was passed in 1593, directed specially against them. Sir Walter Raleigh, in the course of the discussion on this measure, estimated the number of the Brownists (as they then were called) at upwards of 20,000, exclusive of women and children. They were treated with great rigour, and several martyrs to these opinions were executed in the reign of Elizabeth. A church had been formed in London, in 1592, in Nicholas Lane; but this persecution drove many to the continent, where several churches were established in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Leyden; that at Leyden being under the pastoral charge of Mr. Robinson, who is often spoken of as the real founder of Independency. Mr. Jacob, another of the exiles, returned to England in 1616, and then established an Independent church in London. During the Long Parliament, the Independents gained a season of comparative freedom; meeting openly, and gathering strength, especially in the character of their converts,—for the Independent leaders were amongst the foremost of the age for talents and sagacity. When Cromwell, therefore, (himself an Independent,) had assumed supreme authority, their principles obtained a potent recognition; and a general toleration, one of their distinguishing ideas, was in great degree effected, notwithstanding strenuous resistance by the Presbyterians, whose system was thus prevented from obtaining wide and stringent application. From the Restoration to the Revolution, Independents suffered much, in common with the other bodies of dissenters; but since the latter period they have gained considerable and constantly increasing liberty, and now present the aspect of a large and united community, second to none amongst seceding churches for position and political importance.

The earliest account of the number of Independent congregations refers to 1812; before that period, Independent and Presbyterian congregations were returned together. In 1812, there seem to have been 1,024 Independent churches in England and Wales (799 in England, and 225 in Wales). In 1838, an estimate gives 1,840 churches in England and Wales. The present Census makes the number 3,244 (2,604 in England and 640 in Wales); with accommodation (after making an allowance for 185 incomplete returns) for 1,063,136 persons. The attendance on the Census-Sunday was as follows—after making an addition for 59 chapels for which the numbers are not given—Morning, 524,612; Afternoon, 232,285; Evening, 457,162.

3. BAPTISTS.

3. BAPTISTS.

Distinctive Tenets.

The distinguishing tenets of the Baptists relate to two points, upon which they differ from nearly every other Christian denomination; viz. (1), the proper subjects, and (2), the proper mode, of baptism. Holding that the rite itself was instituted for perpetual celebration, Baptists consider, (1), that it was meant to be imparted only on profession of belief by the recipient, and that this profession cannot properly be made by proxy, as the custom is by sponsors in the Established Church, but must be the genuine and rational avowal of the baptized person himself. To illustrate and fortify this main position, they refer to many passages of Scripture which describe the ceremony as performed on persons of undoubtedly mature intelligence and age, and assert the absence from the sacred writings of all statement or inevitable implication that by any other persons was the ceremony ever shared. Adults being therefore held to be the only proper subjects of the ordinance, it is also held that (2), the only proper mode is, not, as generally practised, by a sprinkling or affusion of the water on the person, but, by a total immersion of the party in the water. The arguments by which this proposition is supposed to be successfully maintained, are gathered from a critical examination of the meaning of the word βαπτίζω—from the circumstances said to have accompanied the rite whenever its administration is described in Scripture—and from general accordance of the advocated mode with the practice of the ancient Church.

Different Sects
of Baptists.

These views are entertained in common by all Baptists. Upon other points, however, differences prevail, and separate Baptist bodies have in consequence been formed. In England the following comprise the whole of the various sections which unitedly compose the Baptist denomination :

3. BAPTISTS

- General (Unitarian) Baptists.
- General (New Connexion) Baptists.
- Particular Baptists.
- Seventh Day Baptists.
- Scotch Baptists.

The “Seventh Day Baptists” differ from the other General Baptist churches simply on the ground that the seventh, not the first, day of the week should be the one still celebrated as the sabbath. They established congregations very soon after the first introduction of Baptists into England, but at present they have only two places of worship in England and Wales.

Seventh Day Baptists.

The “Scotch Baptists” derive their origin from the Rev. Mr. M’Lean, who, in 1765, established the first Baptist Church in Scotland. Their doctrinal sentiments are Calvinistic, and they differ from the English Particular Baptists chiefly by a more rigid imitation of what they suppose to be the apostolic usages, such as love feasts, weekly communion, plurality of pastors or elders, washing each other’s feet, &c. In England and Wales there are but 15 congregations of this body.

Scotch Baptists.

The Baptists, as an organized community in England, date their origin from 1608, when the first Baptist church was formed in London ; but their tenets have been held, to greater or to less extent, from very early times. The Baptists claim Tertullian (A.D. 150-220), and Gregory of Nazianzen (A.D. 328-389), as supporters of their views, and contend, on their authority, that the immersion of adults was the practice in the apostolic age. Their sentiments have ever since, it is affirmed, been more or less received by nearly all the various bodies of seceders which from time to time have parted from the Church of Rome ; as the Albigenses and Waldenses, and the other innovating continental sects which existed prior to the Reformation. From the agitation which accompanied that great event, the opinions of the Baptists gained considerable notice, and the holders of them underwent considerable persecution.

History.

In 1832 the Calvinistic Baptist Churches are reported at 926, which number, by the addition (say of 200) for the General Baptists and the New Connexion, would be raised to 1,126. In 1839 the Calvinistic Baptist congregations were computed at 1,276, and allowing 250 for the other Baptist Churches, the total number would be 1,526. These several estimates relate exclusively to England. Wales, for the periods for which accounts are extant, shows that in 1772 there were 59 congregations (of all kinds of Baptists); that in 1808 there were 165 congregations (also of all kinds); while in 1839 there were 244 congregations of Calvinistic Baptists. At the recent Census the numbers were :—

4. THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, OR QUAKERS.

The "Society of Friends" is the youngest of the four surviving sects which trace their origin to that prolific period which closed the era of the Reformation, and presents an embodiment of perhaps the extremest protest made against the ceremonial religion sanctioned by the Church of Rome. Its founder (whose opinions are, with those of others his contemporaries, still received as the standard of orthodoxy) was George Fox, the son of a Leicestershire weaver, who, in 1646, at the age of 22, commenced the public proclamation of his sentiments. Conceiving that, in spite of the advance which had been made towards more spiritual worship, far too much reliance was still placed in forms and ceremonies and mere human agency in the work of man's redemption, he put forward, as the prominent topic of his preaching, the necessity of the immediate influence of the Spirit of God upon the souls of men; without which influence, he taught, neither could the truths of Scripture be correctly understood nor effectual faith excited.

Divine guidance.

Fox and the early Friends believed that the direct divine suggestions could unfailingly be recognized as such by those receiving them, and thus distinguished from the usual promptings which result from ordinary motives. It was, doubtless, owing much to this conviction that they shewed such extraordinary courage in the propagation of their views, and such unshaken fortitude in suffering the consequent persecution. Believing that the course of conduct which seemed right to them was actually instigated and commanded by express divine authority, no threatenings nor dangers could divert them from pursuing it. The magistrates in vain precluded them from preaching in a certain neighbourhood: they were sure to be found, the next day, labouring in that precise locality. In vain their meetings were dispersed by the civil force, and the persons present carried off to prison: on their next appointed day of worship another congregation was invariably found to occupy the vacant edifice and follow unresistingly their predecessors to the gaol. Obedience to the same conviction of imperious duty led them often into churches, to proclaim, when opportunity was offered, their distinctive principles; and sometimes it induced them to address epistles of advice to sovereigns or judges, urging them to govern justly and administer the laws with righteousness. The Journal of George Fox abounds in passages implying that both he and his associates believed themselves to be directed in their movements by divine inspiration, and even that they sometimes thus obtained the power to prophesy.

4. THE SOCIETY
OF FRIENDS,
OR QUAKERS.

As most of the names bestowed by custom on the days and months derive their origin from Pagan superstition, Friends object to use them; substituting "first day," "second day," "first month," "second month," for "Sunday," "Monday," "January," and "February," respectively; and so on of the rest.

Names of days and months.

The whole community of Friends is modelled somewhat on the Presbyterian system. Three gradations of meetings or synods,—monthly, quarterly, and yearly,—administer the affairs of the Society, including in their supervision matters both of spiritual discipline and secular polity. The MONTHLY MEETINGS, composed of all the congregations within a definite circuit, judge of the fitness of new candidates for membership, supply certificates to such as move to other districts, choose fit persons to be Elders to watch over the ministry, attempt the reformation or pronounce the expulsion of all such as walk disorderly, and generally seek to stimulate their members to religious duty. They also make provision for the poor of the society, (none of whom are, consequently, ever known to require parochial relief,) and secure the education of their children. Overseers also are appointed to assist in the promotion of these objects. At monthly meetings, also, marriages are sanctioned previous to their solemnization at a meeting for worship.—Several monthly meetings compose a QUARTERLY MEETING, to which they forward general reports of their condition, and at which appeals are heard from their decisions.—The YEARLY MEETING holds the same relative position to the quarterly meetings as the latter do to the monthly meetings, and has the general superintendence of the society in a particular country: that held in London comprehends the quarterly meetings of Great Britain, by all of which representatives are appointed and reports addressed to the yearly meeting. Representatives also attend from a yearly meeting for Ireland held in Dublin. It likewise issues annual epistles of advice and caution, appoints committees, and acts as a court of ultimate appeal from quarterly and monthly meetings.

Discipline.

A similar series of meetings, under regulations framed by the men's yearly meeting, and contained in the Book of Discipline, is held by the female members, whose proceedings are, however, mainly limited to mutual edification.

Connected with the yearly meeting is a MEETING FOR SUFFERINGS, composed of ministers, elders, and members chosen by the quarterly meetings. Its original object was to prevail upon the government to grant relief from the many injuries to which the early Friends were constantly exposed. It has gradually had the sphere of its operations extended, and is now a standing committee representing the yearly meeting during its recess, and attending generally to all such matters as affect the welfare of the body.

There are also meetings of preachers and elders for the purpose of mutual consultation and advice, and the preservation of a pure and orthodox ministry.

In case of disputes among Friends, they are not to appeal to the ordinary courts of law, but to submit the matter to the arbitration of two or more of their fellow-members. If either party refuses to obey the award, the Monthly Meeting to which he belongs may proceed to expel him from the society.

From the period of the Revolution of 1688 the Friends have received the benefits of the Toleration Act. By the statutes of 7 & 8 Wm. III., c. 34., and

4. THE SOCIETY
OF FRIENDS,
OR QUAKERS.Progress of the Society.

3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 49., their solemn affirmations are accepted in lieu of oaths; and the abrogation of the Test Act renders them eligible for public offices.

The first assemblies of the Friends for separate public worship were held in Leicestershire in 1644. In 1652 the Society had extended itself throughout most of the northern counties, and before the Restoration, meetings were established in nearly all the English and Welsh counties, as well as in Ireland, Scotland, the West Indies, and the British provinces of North America. The Society in the United Kingdom is not now increasing its numbers. The Friends themselves account for this, in part, by the constant emigration of members to America, where the body is much more numerous than in England.* But they do not hesitate to admit that much is attributable to the feebler endeavours now than formerly to gain proselytes. Since 1800 their number, if computed by the number of their meeting-houses, has diminished. In 1800 they possessed 413 meeting-houses, while the number returned to the Census in 1851 was only 371. They say, however, that this does not inevitably indicate a smaller number of professors; since, of late, there has been a considerable tendency amongst them to migrate from the rural districts, and to settle in the larger towns. Small communities are to be found in parts of France, Germany, Norway, and Australia.

5. UNITARIANS.

5. UNITARIANS.

Differences of opinion respecting the person of Christ are very ancient. Arius, a presbyter of Alexandria, whose name is most familiar in connexion with the anti-Trinitarian dispute, existed early in the fourth century, but Sabellius had preceded him in the third, in propagation of very similar sentiments. The "Arian heresy" provoked extensive discord in the general church; and we read of states and princes choosing sides in this mysterious controversy, and undertaking sanguinary wars for its decision. The "heresy" prevailed to some considerable extent in Britain in the earliest period of Christianity, before the arrival of the Saxons.

In the sixteenth century, another form of anti-Trinitarian doctrine was originated by Lælius and Faustus Socinus, and obtained a wide success in Poland. From these two prominent maintainers of their sentiments, the modern Unitarians are often called "Socinians;" but they themselves repudiate the name,—in part because of a diversity of creed on some particular points, and partly from repugnance to be held as followers of any human teacher. In Switzerland, Servetus, by the instigation or consent of Calvin, was burnt, in 1553, for entertaining these opinions.

In England, also, similar sentiments prevailed about the middle of the sixteenth century, and subsequently two Arians were burnt to death in the reign of James the First. John Biddle was imprisoned for the offence in the time of the Commonwealth, and died in prison in 1662. Milton was a semi-Arian. But little progress was effected till the opening of the eighteenth century, when many of the old Presbyterian ministers embraced opinions adverse to the Trinitarian doctrine. A noticeable controversy on the subject was begun in 1719, in the west of England, and two Presbyterian ministers, in consequence of their participation in these sentiments, were removed from their pastoral charges. Nevertheless, the Presbyterian clergy gradually became impregnated, although for some time they gave no particular expression from their pulpits to their views in this respect. In course of little time, however, their congregations either came to be entirely assimilated with themselves in doctrine, or in part seceded to the Independent body. Thus, the ancient Presbyterian chapels and endowments have, in great degree, become the property of Unitarians, whose origin, as a distinct community in England, may be dated from the first occurrence of such virtual transfers, viz., from about the period just subsequent to 1730.

5. UNITARIANS.

The modern Unitarians differ from the ancient Anti-Trinitarians, chiefly by attributing to the Saviour less of divine and more of human nature. Indeed, He is described by several of their most conspicuous writers as a man "constituted in all respects like other men." His mission was, they say, to introduce, by God's appointment, a new moral dispensation; and His death they look upon not as a sacrifice or an atonement for sin, but as a martyrdom in defence of truth.* Not admitting the essential sinfulness of human nature, they do not admit the necessity of an atonement: they consider that a conscientious diligent discharge of moral duties will be adequate to secure for men their future happiness. In consequence of their disbelief in the divinity of Christ, they avoid all personal addresses to Him, whether of prayer or praise. The Scriptures they believe to contain authentic statements; but they do not allow the universal inspiration of the writers. Many of the modern Unitarians believe that all mankind will ultimately be restored to happiness. This creed is very prevalent amongst the Unitarians of America, where upwards of 1,000 churches are reported to profess it. It is there called "Universalism."

Tenets.

Persons denying the doctrine of the Trinity were excepted from the benefits of the Toleration Act. and remained so until 1813, when the section in that statute which affected them was abrogated. Since that period they have been exactly in the same position as all other Protestant Dissenters with respect to their political immunities.

Civil position.

The form of ecclesiastical government adopted by the Unitarians is substantially "congregational;" each individual congregation ruling itself without regard to any courts or synods.

Church government.

Returns have been received at the Census Office from 229 congregations connected with this body.

6. UNITED BRETHREN, OR MORAVIANS.

Christianity was introduced into Bohemia in the ninth century, from Greece; but it was not long before the Papal system, aided by the Emperor, became established firmly in that country. Still, the inhabitants were not disposed to yield their cherished sentiments; and, stimulated by the writings of Wycliffe and the preaching and martyrdom of Huss and Jerome, they afterwards distinguished themselves, though unsuccessfully, as firm adherents to the doctrines of the Reformation. In the persecution which resulted from the triumph of the Emperor in the war with the Elector Palatine, the Protestant clergy were banished from the kingdom. They retired to Poland; where, in 1632, Comenius was appointed "Bishop of the dispersed brethren from Bohemia and Moravia." In Moravia, ostensible conformity with Romish worship was enforced; but many of the brethren, cherishing the Protestant faith, met secretly together for devotion, and, as opportunity occurred, fled thence into the Protestant states of Germany. Ten of these, in 1722, obtained permission from Count Zinzendorf to settle on a portion of his lands. The little settlement thus formed was called "Herrnhut," the watch of the Lord. Count Zinzendorf himself soon came to be the head of the new church, which, in 1727, had grown to 500 persons. They debated then about a combination with the Lutheran church; but the decision of the lot, to which they appealed upon the matter, was in favour of their continuance as a distinct society. They, therefore, formed themselves into a regular community, with the designation of "Unitas Fratrum," and began to establish congregations in various parts of Europe, and to send forth missionaries to remotest settlements. Their first establishment in England seems to have occurred in 1742.*

Doctrines.

The doctrines of the United Brethren are in harmony with those propounded in the "Confession of Augsburg." At a general synod held at Barby, in 1775, the following declaration was adopted: "The chief doctrine to which the Church of the Brethren adheres, and which we must preserve as an invaluable treasure committed unto us, is this—that by the sacrifice for sin made by Jesus Christ, and by that alone, grace and deliverance from sin are to be obtained for all mankind. We will, therefore, without lessening the importance of any other article of the Christian faith, steadfastly maintain the following five points:—

"1. The doctrine of the universal depravity of man; that there is no health in man, and that, since the fall, he has no power whatever left to help himself.

"2. The doctrine of the divinity of Christ: that God, the creator of all things, was manifest in the flesh, and reconciled us to himself; that he is before all things, and that by him all things consist.

"3. The doctrine of the atonement and satisfaction made for us by Jesus Christ: that he was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification: and that, by his merits alone, we receive freely the forgiveness of sin and sanctification in soul and body.

"4. The doctrine of the Holy Spirit, and the operations of His grace: that it is He who worketh in us conviction of sin, faith in Jesus, and pureness in heart.

"5. The doctrine of the fruits of faith: that faith must evidence itself by willing obedience to the commandments of God, from love and gratitude."†

Orders.

The Moravian church is formed according to the episcopal model. The bishops have been ordained in regular descent from those of the ancient Bohemian church. To bishops alone belongs the power of ordaining ministers. The other orders are presbyters and deacons.

Discipline.

The discipline of the church is regulated by certain written "Congregational Orders or Statutes," with which every one admitted as a member of the church expresses his concurrence. It consists of a series of reproofs and admonitions; the ultimate and highest punishment being that of excision from the community.

Government.

The chief direction of the affairs of the church is committed to a board of elders, appointed by the general synods, which assemble at irregular intervals varying from seven to twelve years. Of these boards, one is universal, and the others local: the former being resident at Hernhutt, and maintaining a general supervision over every part of the society—the latter being specially connected with particular congregations. Bishops, beyond their power of ordination, have no authority except what they derive from these boards. There are female elders, who attend at the boards; but they do not vote.

* See Southey's Life of Wesley, chapter 5.

† See Conder's View of all Religions, page 252.

The number of persons actually members of the "Unity" does not exceed 12,000 in the whole of Europe, nor 6,000 in America; but at least 100,000 more, it is considered, are in virtual connexion with the society and under the spiritual guidance of its preachers. The number of their chapels in England and Wales, reported by the Census officers, was 32, with 9,305 sittings.

Numbers.

The United Brethren have always been distinguished by their efforts to establish missionary stations in the most remote and neglected portions of the globe. In 1851 they had 70 settlements distributed amongst the Hottentots, the Greenlanders, the Esquimaux, the Indians, the Australian aborigines, and the Negroes of the West Indies and America. The number of missionaries was 294; and the converts (not mere nominal professors) then belonging to the missionary congregations amounted to 69,149. The expense of the mission is about 13,000*l.* annually; three fourths of which are raised by other Christian bodies (principally by the Church of England) who appreciate the eminent value of these labours.

7. WESLEYAN METHODISTS.*

Under the general term of "Methodists" are comprehended two principal and several subordinate sections, having totally distinct ecclesiastical organizations. The two grand sections differ from each other upon points of doctrine; one professing Arminian, and the other Calvinistic, sentiments. The former are the followers of John Wesley, and from him are called "Wesleyan Methodists"—the latter were originated by the labours of George Whitfield, but their founder's name is not perpetuated in their title, which is, generally, that of "Calvinistic Methodists." Each of the two grand sections is divided into several smaller sections, differing from each other upon points of church government and discipline: the Wesleyan Methodists comprise the "Original Connexion," the "New Connexion," the "Primitive Methodists," and the "Wesleyan Association"—the Calvinistic Methodists comprise the body bearing that specific name, and also the churches belonging to what is known as "The Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion."

METHODISTS.
Different kinds.

(a) THE ORIGINAL CONNEXION.

As at present settled, the form of church government somewhat resembles that of the Scottish Presbyterian churches in the order of the courts, in the relation they bear to each other, and in their respective constitutions and functions. The difference is in the greater degree of authority in spiritual matters exercised by the Wesleyan ministers, who preside in their courts not as mere chairmen or moderators, but as pastors. This is said by them to secure an equitable balance of power between the two parties, lay and clerical, in these courts, and thus to provide against abuse on either side. How far this is the case will be more clearly seen by a description of these various courts, tracing them upwards from the lowest to the highest,—from the Class to the Conference.

ment.

The CLASSES were the very first of the arrangements introduced by Mr. Wesley. They consist, in general, of about 12 persons; each class having its appointed "leader," (an experienced Christian layman, nominated by the superintendent of a circuit, and appointed by a leaders' meeting,) whose duty is to meet his class once every week—converse with each class member, hear from him a statement of his spiritual condition, and give appropriate counsel. Every member of a class, except in cases of extreme poverty, is expected to contribute at least a penny per week towards the funds of the society. Out of the proceeds of this contribution, assisted by other funds, the stipends of the ministers are paid. The system of class meetings is justly considered the very life of Methodism.

Ministers.

The public worship of these societies is conducted in each circuit by two descriptions of preachers, one clerical the other lay. The clerics are separated entirely to the work of the ministry—are members of, or in connexion with, or received as probationers by, the Conference—and are supported by funds raised for that purpose in the classes and congregations. From one to four of these, called "itinerant preachers," are appointed annually for not exceeding three years in immediate succession to the same circuit. Their ministry is not confined to any particular chapel in the circuit, but they act interchangeably from place to place, seldom preaching in the same place more than one Sunday without a change, which is effected according to a plan generally re-made every quarter. Of itinerant preachers there are at present about 915 in Great Britain. The lay, or "local" preachers as they are denominated, follow secular callings, like other of their fellow subjects, and preach on the sabbaths at the places appointed for them in the above-mentioned plan; as great an interval being observed between their appointments to the same place as can be conveniently arranged.

Mode of worship.

The public services of Methodists present a combination of the forms of the Church of England with the usual practice of Dissenting Churches. In the larger chapels, the Church Liturgy is used; and, in all, the Sacrament is administered according to the Church of England rubric. Independently of Sabbath worship, Love Feasts are occasionally celebrated; and a midnight meeting, on the last day of each year, is held as a solemn "Watch Night," for the purpose of impressing on the mind a sense of the brevity and rapid flight of time.

At present there are 428 circuits in Great Britain. Besides preaching in the various chapels in their respective circuits, the itinerant preachers administer the sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. One or other of them, according to an arrangement amongst themselves, meets every class in his circuit once in every quarter, personally converses with every member, and distributes to all such as have throughout the past three months walked orderly a ticket, which authenticates their membership. One of the ministers in every circuit is called the "superintendent," whose duties, in addition to his ordinary labours as a travelling preacher, are, to see that the Methodist discipline is properly maintained,—to admit candidates into membership (subject to a veto by a Leaders' meeting),—and to expel from the society any member whom a Leaders' meeting shall pronounce guilty of any particular offence. Appeal, however, lies from his decision to a District meeting, and ultimately to the Conference. There is also a "circuit steward," whose duty is to receive from the society stewards the contributions of class members, and to superintend their application for the purposes of the circuit.

The Conference.

THE CONFERENCE, the highest Wesleyan court, is composed exclusively of ministers. It derives its authority from a deed of declaration, executed by Mr. Wesley in 1784, by which it was provided that, after the decease of himself and his brother Charles, 100 persons, named in the deed, "being preachers and "expounders of God's holy word, under the care and in connexion with the "said John Wesley," should exercise the authority which Wesley himself possessed, to appoint preachers to the various chapels. Vacancies in the "hundred" were to be filled up by the remainder at an annual Conference. In pursuance of this deed, a Conference of 100 ministers meets yearly in July, with the addition of the representatives selected by the district meetings, and such other ministers as are appointed or permitted to attend by the district committees. The custom is, for all these ministers to share in the proceedings and to vote; though all the decisions thus arrived at must be sanctioned by the legal "hundred," ere they can have binding force. The Conference must sit for at least five days, but not beyond three weeks. Its principal transactions are, to examine the moral and ministerial character of every preacher—to receive candidates on trial—to admit ministers into the connexion—and to appoint ministers to particular circuits or stations. Independently of its functions under this deed poll, the Conference exercises a general superintendence over the various institutions of the body; including the appointment of various committees, as, (1) The Committee of Privileges for guarding the interests of the Wesleyan Connexion; (2) The Committee for the management of Missions; (3) The Committee for the management of Schools for educating the children of Wesleyan ministers; (4) The General Book Committee (for superintending the publication and sale of Wesleyan works); (5) The Chapel Building Committee (without whose previous consent in writing no chapel, whether large or small, is to be erected, purchased, or enlarged); (6) The Chapel Relief Committee; (7) The Contingent Fund Committee; (8) The Committee of the Auxiliary Fund for worn-out ministers and ministers' widows; and the committees for the various schools, theological institutions, &c.

The Conference has also assumed to itself the power of making new laws for the government of the Connexion; provided that, if any circuit meeting disapprove such law, it is not to be enforced in that circuit for the space of one year. Any circuit has the power of memorializing Conference on behalf of any change considered desirable, provided the June quarterly meeting should so determine.

The doctrines held by the Wesleyans are substantially accordant with the Articles of the Established Church, interpreted in their Arminian sense. In this they follow Mr. Wesley rather than Arminius; for although the writings of the latter are received with high respect, the first four volumes of Wesley's Sermons, and his Notes on the New Testament (which they hold to be "neither Calvinistic on the one hand nor Pelagian on the other") are referred to as the standard of their orthodoxy. The continued influence of their founder is manifested by the general adherence of the body to his opinions on the subject of attainment to Christian perfection in the present life—on the possibility of final ruin after the reception of divine grace—and on the experience by every convert of a clear assurance of his acceptance with God through faith in Jesus Christ.

The Census Accounts show 6,579 chapels in England and Wales, belonging to this Connexion in March 1851; containing (allowance being made for defective returns) accommodation for 1,447,580 persons. The number of attendants on the Census Sunday was: Morning, 492,714; Afternoon, 383,964; Evening, 667,850: including an estimate for 133 chapels, for which the number of attendants was not stated.

Centenary.

In 1839 was celebrated the Centenary of the existence of Wesleyan Methodism; and the gratitude of the people towards the system under which they had derived so much advantage was displayed by contributions to the large amount of 216,000*l.*, which sum was appropriated to the establishment of theological institutions in Yorkshire and at Richmond—the purchase of the “Centenary Hall and Mission House” in Bishopsgate Street—the provision of a missionary ship—the discharge of chapel debts—and the augmentation of the incomes of the Methodist religious societies.

Of late years a considerable agitation (to be more particularly mentioned when describing “Wesleyan Reformers”) has diminished to a great extent the number of the members in connexion. It is stated that by this division the Original Connexion has sustained a loss of 100,000 members.

THE METHODIST NEW CONNEXION.

Origin.

For some time after Mr. Wesley's death in 1791, considerable agitation was observable throughout the numerous societies which, under his control, had rapidly sprung up in every part of England. The more immediate subjects of dispute had reference to (1), “the right of the people to hold their public “religious worship at such hours as were most convenient, without being “restricted to the mere intervals of the hours appointed for service in the “Established Church,” and (2), “the right of the people to receive the “ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper from the hands of their own “ministers, and in their own places of worship;” but the principal and fundamental question in dispute concerned the right of the laity to participate in the spiritual and secular government of the body. Wesley himself had, in his lifetime, always exercised an absolute authority; and after his decease the travelling preachers claimed the same extent of power. A vigorous opposition was, however, soon originated, which continued during several years; the Conference attempting various unsuccessful measures for restoring harmony. A “Plan of Pacification” was adopted by the Conference in 1795, and was received with general satisfaction so far as the ordinances were concerned; but the question of lay influence remained untouched till 1797, when the Conference conceded that the Leaders' meetings should have the right to exercise an absolute veto upon the admission of new members to the Society, and that no member should be expelled for immorality, “until such immorality had been proved at a Leaders' meeting.” Certain lesser rights were at the same time conceded to the quarterly meetings, in which the laity were represented by the presence of their stewards and class leaders. But this was the extent of the concessions made by the preachers; and all propositions for lay-delegation to the Conference and the district meetings were conclusively rejected.

Foremost amongst many who remained unsatisfied by these concessions was the Rev. Alexander Kilham, who, singularly enough, was born at Epworth in Lincolnshire, the birthplace of the Wesleys. Mr. Kilham, first acquiring prominence as an assertor of the right of Methodists to meet for worship in church hours and to receive the sacraments from their own ministers, was gradually led to take an active part in advocacy of the principle of lay participation in the government of the Connexion.

Originated by a movement for a certain and specific alteration in the constitution of Wesleyan Methodism, the New Connexion differs from the parent body only with respect to those ecclesiastical arrangements which were then the subjects of dispute. In doctrines, and in all the essential and distinctive features of Wesleyan Methodism, there is no divergence: the Arminian tenets are as firmly held by the New as by the Old Connexion; and the outline of ecclesiastical machinery—comprising classes, circuits, districts, and the Conference—is in both the same. The grand distinction rests upon the different degrees of power allowed in each communion to the laity. It has been shown that, in the “Original Connexion,” all authority is virtually vested in the preachers: they alone compose the Conference—their influence is paramount in the inferior courts—and even when, as in financial matters, laymen are appointed to committees, such appointments are entirely in the hands of Conference. The “New Connexion,” on the contrary, admits, in all its courts, the principle of lay participation in church government: candidates for membership must be admitted by the voice of the existing members, not by the minister alone; offending members cannot be expelled but with the concurrence of a Leaders’ meeting; officers of the body, whether leaders, ministers, or stewards, are elected by the church and ministers conjointly; and in District Meetings and the annual Conference lay delegates (as many in number as the ministers) are present, freely chosen by the members of the churches.

Distinctive character.

The progress of the New Connexion since its origin has been as follows, in Progress.

Funds.

In 1847 the Jubilee of the connexion was celebrated, and it was resolved to raise a fund of 20,000*l.*, to be appropriated to the relief of distressed chapels, to the erection of a theological institution, the extension of home and foreign missions, and the provision for aged and retired ministers.

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.

Origin.

About the commencement of the present century, certain among the Wesleyans (and conspicuously Hugh Bourne and William Clowes) began to put in practice a revival of these modes of operation, which, as already intimated, had by that time been abandoned by the then consolidated body. The Conference of 1807 affirmed a resolution adverse to such unprescribed expedients; and the consequence of this disapprobation was the birth of the Primitive Methodist Connexion,—the first class being formed at Standley in Staffordshire in 1810. The following table, furnished by the Conference itself, will show the progress made by the connexion since that period.

Progress.

Periods.	Chapels.		Preachers.		Class Leaders.	Members.	Sabbath Schools.
	Connexional.	Rented Rooms, &c.	Travelling.	Local.			Schools.	Teachers.	Scholars.

1853	1,789	3,565	568	9,594	6,767	108,926	1,535	22,792	121,394

These statistics refer as well to the foreign stations of the Connexion as to England and Wales; but the deduction to be made upon this account will not exceed two or three per cent. of the above figures. The number of chapels, &c. returned by the Census officers was only 2871 so that many of the above must probably be small rooms, which thus escaped the notice of the enumerators. The number of connexional circuits and missions is, altogether, 313, of which, 13 are in Canada, 2 in South Australia, 1 in New South Wales, 1 in Victoria, and 3 in New Zealand. The "Missions," whether abroad or at home, are localities in which the labours of the preachers are remunerated not from local sources, but from the circuit contributions or from the general funds of the connexion appropriated to missions.

Doctrines and Polity.

The doctrines held by the Primitive Methodists are precisely similar to those maintained by the Original Connexion, and the outline of their ecclesiastical polity is also similar, the chief distinction being the admission, by the former body, of lay representatives to the Conference, and the generally greater influence allowed, in all the various courts, to laymen.

Camp meetings, though occasionally held, are much less frequent now than formerly: the people, it is thought, are more accessible than 50 years ago to other agencies.

BIBLE CHRISTIANS.

7. WESLEYAN
METHODISTS.

The "Bible Christians" (sometimes called Bryanites) are included here among the Methodist communities, more from a reference to their sentiments and polity than to their origin. The body, indeed, was not the result of a secession from the Methodist Connexion, but was rather the origination of a new community, which, as it grew, adopted the essential principles of Methodism.

The founder of the body was Mr. William O'Bryan, a Wesleyan local preacher in Cornwall, who, in 1815, separated from the Wesleys, and began himself to form societies upon the Methodist plan. In a very few years considerable advance was made, and throughout Devonshire and Cornwall many societies were established; so that, in 1819, there were nearly 30 itinerant preachers. In that year, the first Conference was held, when the Connexion was divided into 12 circuits. Mr. O'Bryan withdrew from the body in 1829.

In doctrinal profession there is no distinction between "Bible Christians" and the various bodies of Arminian Methodists.

The forms of public worship, too, are of the same simple character; but, in the administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, "it is usual to receive the elements in a sitting posture, as it is believed that that practice is more conformable to the posture of body in which it was at first received by Christ's Apostles, than kneeling; but persons are at liberty to kneel, if it be more suitable to their views and feelings to do so."*

According to the Census returns, the number of chapels belonging to the body in England and Wales in 1851 was 482; by far the greater number being situated in the south-western counties of England. The number of sittings, (after adding an estimate for 42 imperfect returns,) was 66,834. The attendance on the Census-Sunday was: Morning, 14,902; Afternoon, 24,345; Evening, 34,612; an estimate being made for eight chapels the number of attendants at which was not stated in the returns. The Minutes of Conference for 1852† present the following view:—

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION.

In 1834 a controversy was originated as to the propriety of the proposed establishment of a Wesleyan Theological Institution; and a minister who disapproved of such a measure, and prepared and published some remarks against it, was expelled from the Connexion. Sympathizers with him were in similar manner expelled.

As already intimated, the "Association" differs from the "Old Connexion" only with regard to the specific subjects of dispute which caused the rupture.

7. WESLEYAN
METHODISTS.

The only variations, therefore, are in constitutional arrangements, and the principal of these are as follows :—

Annual Assembly.

The Annual Assembly (answering to the Old Wesleyan Conference) is distinguished by the introduction of the laity as representatives. It consists of such of the itinerant and local preachers, and other official or private members, as the circuits, societies, or churches in union with the Association (and contributing 50*l.* to the support of the ministry) elect.* The number of representatives is regulated by the number of constituents. Circuits with less than 500 members send one; those with more than 500 and less than 1,000 send two; and such as have more than 1,000 send three. The Annual Assembly admits persons on trial as preachers, examines them, receives them into full connexion, appoints them to their circuits, and excludes or censures them when necessary. It also directs the application of all General or Connexional Funds, and appoints a committee to represent it till the next Assembly. But it does not interfere with strictly local matters, for "each circuit has the right and "power to govern itself by its local courts, without any interference as to "the management of its internal affairs."†

Discipline.

As was to be expected from the reason of its origin, the Association gives more influence to the laity in matters of church discipline than is permitted by the Old Connexion. Therefore it is provided, that "no member shall be "expelled from the Association except by the direction of a majority of a "leaders' society or circuit quarterly meeting."‡

Statistics.

According to the Minutes of the 17th Annual Assembly, the following was the state of the Association in England and Wales in 1852, no allowance having, however, been made for several incomplete returns :—

Itinerant preachers and missionaries	-	-	-	90
Local preachers	-	-	-	1,016
Class leaders	-	-	-	1,353
Members in society	-	-	-	19,411
Chapels	-	-	-	329
Preaching places, rooms, &c.	-	-	-	171
Sunday schools	-	-	-	322
Sunday-school teachers	-	-	-	6,842
Sunday-school scholars	-	-	-	43,389

The Census Returns make mention of 419 chapels and preaching rooms containing (after an estimate for the sittings in 34 cases of deficient information) accommodation for 98,813 persons. The attendance on the Census-Sunday (making an allowance for five chapels the returns from which are silent on this point) was: Morning, 32,308; Afternoon, 21,140; Evening, 40,655.

WESLEYAN METHODIST REFORMERS.

In 1849, another of the constantly recurring agitations with respect to ministerial authority in matters of church discipline arose, and still continues. Some parties having circulated through the Connexion certain anonymous pamphlets called "Fly Sheets," in which some points of Methodist procedure were attacked in a manner offensive to the Conference, that body, with a view to ascertain the secret authors (suspected to be ministers), adopted the expedient of tendering to every minister in the Connexion a "Declaration," reprobating the obnoxious circulars, and repudiating all connexion with the authorship. Several ministers refused submission to this test, as being an unfair attempt to make the offending parties criminate themselves, and partaking of the nature of an Inquisition. The Conference, however, held that such a method of examination was both scripturally proper, and accordant with the usages of Methodism; and the ministers persisting in their opposition were expelled. This stringent measure caused a great sensation through the various societies, and meetings were convened to sympathize with the excluded ministers. The Conference, however, steadily pursued its policy—considered all such meetings violations of Wesleyan order—and, acting through the superintendent ministers in all the circuits, punished by expulsion every member who attended them. In consequence of this proceeding, the important question was again, and with increased anxiety, debated,—whether the admission and excision of church members is exclusively the duty of the minister, or whether, in the exercise of such momentous discipline, the other members of the church have not a right to share.

The agitation on these questions (and on some collateral ones suggested naturally by these) is still prevailing, and has grown extremely formidable. It is calculated that the loss of the Old Connexion, by expulsions and withdrawals, now amounts to 100,000 members. The Reformers have not yet ostensibly succeeded, and can therefore not be said to form a separate Connexion. They regard themselves as still Wesleyan Methodists, illegally expelled, and they demand the restoration of all preachers, officers, and members who have been excluded. In the meantime, they have set in operation a distinct machinery of Methodism, framed according to the plan which they consider ought to be adopted by the parent body. In their own returns it is represented that they had in 1852, 2,000 chapels or preaching places, and 2,800 preachers.

At the time of the Census, in March 1851, the movement was but in its infancy; so that the returns received, though possibly an accurate account of the then condition of the body, will fail to give an adequate idea of its present state. From these returns it seems there were at that time 339 chapels in connexion with the movement; having accommodation (after estimates for 51 defective schedules) for 67,814 persons. The attendance on the Census-Sunday (making an allowance for five cases where the numbers were not given) was as follows: Morning, 30,470; Afternoon, 16,080; Evening, 44,953.

8. CALVINISTIC METHODISTS.

George Whitfield, born in 1714, the son of an innkeeper at Gloucester, where he acted as a common drawer, was admitted as a servitor in Pembroke College Oxford, in 1732. Being then the subject of religious impressions, to which the evil character of his early youth lent force and poignancy, he naturally was attracted to those meetings for religious exercises which the brothers Wesley had a year or two before originated. After a long period of mental anguish, and the practice, for some time, of physical austerities, he ultimately found relief and comfort; and, resolving to devote himself to the labours of the ministry, was admitted into holy orders by the Bishop of Gloucester. Preaching in various churches previous to his embarkation for Georgia, whither he had determined to follow Mr. Wesley, his uncommon force of oratory was at once discerned, and scenes of extraordinary popular commotion were displayed wherever he appeared. In 1737 he left for Georgia, just as Wesley had returned. He ministered with much success among the settlers for three months, and then came back to England, for the purpose of procuring aid towards the foundation of an orphan house for the colony. The same astonishing sensation was created by his preaching as before; the churches overflowed with eager auditors, and crowds would sometimes stand outside. Perceiving that no edifice was large enough to hold the numbers who desired and pressed to hear him, he began to entertain the thought of preaching in the open air; and when, on visiting Bristol shortly after, all the pulpits were denied to him, he carried his idea into practice, and commenced his great experiment by preaching to the colliers at Kingswood. His first audience numbered about 200; the second 2,000; the third 4,000, and so from ten to fourteen and to twenty thousand.* Such success encouraged similar attempts in London; and accordingly, when the churchwardens of Islington forbade his entrance into the pulpit, which the vicar had offered him, he preached in the churchyard; and, deriving more and more encouragement from his success, he made Moorfields and Kennington Common the scenes of his impassioned eloquence, and there controlled, persuaded, and subdued assemblages of thirty and forty thousand of the rudest auditors. He again departed for Georgia in 1748, founded there the orphan house, and, requiring funds for its support, again returned to England in 1751.

Separation of Whitfield and Wesley.

Up to this period, Wesley and Whitfield had harmoniously laboured in conjunction; but there now arose a difference of sentiment between them on the doctrine of election, which resulted in their separation. Whitfield held the Calvinistic tenets, Wesley the Arminian; and their difference proving, after some discussion, to be quite irreconcilable, they thenceforth each pursued a different path. Mr. Wesley steadily and skilfully constructing the elaborate machinery of Wesleyan Methodism; and Whitfield following his plan of field itinerancy, with a constant and amazing popularity, but making no endeavour to originate a sect. He died in New England in 1769, at the age of 55.†

Present position of Whitfield's
followers.

His followers, however, and those of other eminent evangelists who sympathized with his proceedings, gradually settled into separate religious bodies, principally under two distinctive appellations; one, the "Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion," and the other, the "Welsh Calvinistic Methodists." These, in fact, are now the only sections which survive as individual communities; for most of Whitfield's congregations, not adopting any connexional bond, but existing as independent churches, gradually became absorbed into the Congregational body.

THE COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON'S CONNEXION.

Origin.

Selina, daughter of the Earl of Ferrers, and widow of the Earl of Huntingdon, was one of those on whom the preaching of Whitfield made considerable impression. In 1748 he became her chaplain; and by his advice she assumed a kind of leadership over his followers, erected chapels, engaged ministers or laymen to officiate in them, and founded a college at Trevecca in South Wales, for the education of Calvinistic preachers. After her death, this college was, in 1792, transferred to Cheshunt (Herts), and there it still exists.

The doctrines of the Connexion are almost identical with those of the Church of England, and the form of worship does not materially vary; for the Liturgy is generally employed, though extemporary prayer is frequent.

Although the name "Connexion" is still used, there is no combined or federal ecclesiastical government prevailing. The congregational polity is practically adopted; and of late years, several of the congregations have become, in name as well as virtually, Congregational churches.

* Southey's Life of Wesley, vol. i. p. 201.

† Whitfield during his thirty-four years' ministry is said to have preached no fewer than 23,000 sermons, being more than ten per week,

The number of chapels mentioned in the Census as belonging to this Connexion, or described as "English Calvinistic Methodists," was 109, containing (after an allowance for the sittings in five chapels, the returns for which are defective,) accommodation for 38,727 persons. The attendants on the Census-Sunday (making an estimated addition for seven chapels the returns from which were silent on the point) were: Morning, 21,103; Afternoon, 4,380; Evening, 19,159.

WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODISTS.

The great revival of religion commenced in England by Wesley and Whitfield had been preceded by a similar event in Wales. The principal agent of its introduction there was Howel Harris, a gentleman of Trevecca, in Brecknockshire, who, with a view to holy orders, had begun to study at Oxford, but, offended at the immorality there prevalent, had quitted college, and returned to Wales. He shortly afterwards began a missionary labour in that country, going from house to house, and preaching in the open air. A great excitement was produced; and multitudes attended his discourses. To sustain the religious feeling thus awakened, Mr. Harris, about the year 1736, instituted "Private Societies," similar to those which Wesley was, about the same time, though without communication, forming in England. By 1739 he had established about 300 such societies in South Wales. At first, he encountered much hostility from magistrates and mobs; but after a time his work was taken up by several ministers of the Church of England; one of whom, the Reverend Daniel Rowlands, of Llangeitho, Cardigan, had such a reputation, that "persons" "have been known to come 100 miles to hear him preach on the Sabbaths of "his administering the Lord's Supper;" and he had no less than 2,000 communicants in his church. In 1742, 10 clergymen were assisting in the movement, and 40 or 50 lay preachers. The first chapel was erected in 1747, at Builth in Brecknockshire.

In the meantime, North Wales began to be in similar manner roused; and, in spite of considerable persecution, many members were enrolled, and several chapels built. The Rev. Thomas Charles, of Bala, one of the founders of the British and Foreign Bible Society, was, towards the termination of the century, a prominent instrument in effecting this result.

The growth of the movement, both in North and South Wales, was extremely rapid; but the process of formation into a separate body was more gradual and slow. At first, as several of the most conspicuous labourers were clergymen of the Established Church, the sacraments were administered exclusively by them; but, as converts multiplied, the number of Evangelical clergymen was found inadequate to the occasion: many members were obliged to seek communion with the various dissenting bodies; till, at last, in 1811, 21 among the Methodist preachers were ordained, at a considerable Conference, and from that time forth the sacraments were regularly administered by them in their own chapels, and the body assumed distinctly the appearance of a separate Connexion.

A county in Wales corresponds with a Wesleyan "Circuit," or to a Scottish Presbytery. All the church officers within a county, whether preachers or leaders of private societies, are members of the "Monthly Meeting" of the county. The province of this meeting is, to superintend both the spiritual and secular condition of the societies within the county.

Monthly Meetings.

meetings held every quarter; one in North Wales, and the other in South Wales. The Association consists of all the preachers and leaders of private societies in the Connexion. "At every Association, the whole Connexion is "supposed to be present through its representatives, and the decisions of this "meeting are deemed sufficient authority on every subject relating to the body "through all its branches. It has the prerogative to superintend the cause of "Christ among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists through Wales and England, "to inquire into the affairs of all the private and monthly societies, and to "direct any changes or alterations which it may think requisite." It is at this meeting that the ministers are selected who are to administer the sacraments.

Ministers.

The ministers, among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, are itinerant. They are selected by the private societies, and reported to the monthly meetings, which examine into their qualifications, and permit them to commence on trial. A certain number only, who must previously have been preachers for at least five years, are ordained to administer the sacraments, and this ordination takes place at the Quarterly Associations. The preachers are appointed each to a particular county; but generally once in the course of a year they undertake a missionary tour to distant parts of Wales, when they preach twice every day, on each occasion at a different chapel. Their remuneration is derived from the monthly pence contributed by the members of each congregation; out of which fund a trifling sum is given to them after every sermon. In 1837, a college for the education of ministers was established at Bala, and in 1842 another was established at Trevecca.

Doctrines.

The doctrines of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists may be inferred from the appellation of the body, and be said to be substantially accordant with the Articles of the Established Church, interpreted according to their Calvinistic sense.

Statistics.

The number of chapels returned at the Census as pertaining to the body was 828; containing (after an estimate for 53 chapels which made no return of sittings) accommodation for 211,951 persons. The attendance on the Census-Sunday was: Morning, 79,728; Afternoon, 59,140; Evening, 125,244. It is computed that the body have expended in the erection and repairs of their chapels, between the year 1747 and the present time, a sum amounting to nearly a million sterling. From the "Dyddiadwr Methodistiaidd" for 1853 we learn that the number of ministers was 207, and of preachers 234. The number of communicants was stated on the same authority at 58,577.

The principal societies supported by the Connexion are those connected with Home and Foreign Missions; the contributions to which amount to about 3,000*l.* a year. The operations of the Home Mission are carried on among the English population inhabiting the borders between England and Wales. The Foreign Mission has a station in Brittany (south of France)—the language of that country being a sister dialect of the Welsh—and stations at Cassay and Sylhet in India, the presidency of Bengal.

9. SANDEMANIANS OR GLASSITES.

The Sandemanians—sometimes called Glassites, both appellations being derived from the names of the founders of the sect—first came into notice in Scotland about 1728 or 1729; when Mr. Glass, a minister of the Scottish National Church, avowed opinions on Church Government approaching very nearly those maintained by Congregationalists. Robert Sandeman appeared in advocacy of the same opinions about 1757, and formed a congregation in London in 1762.

The prominent doctrine of the Sandemanians, on which they differ from most other churches, relates to the nature of justifying faith, which Sandeman maintained to be "no more than a simple assent to the divine testimony, passively received by the understanding."

Sandemanians, also, observe certain peculiar practices, supposed by them to have been prevalent amongst the primitive Christians, such as weekly sacraments, love feasts, mutual exhortation, washing each others feet, plurality of elders, the use of the lot, &c.

The number of Sandemanian congregations in England, reported by the Census officers, was six; the number of sittings (after an estimate for two chapels where the information was not given) was 956; and the number of attendants on the Census-Sunday was: Morning, 439; Afternoon, 256; Evening, 61.

10. THE NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH.

10. THE NEW CHURCH.

This body of Christians claims to possess an entirely new dispensation of doctrinal truth derived from the theological writings of Emanuel Swedenborg; and, as the name imports, they refuse to be numbered with the sects of which the general body of Christendom is at present composed.

Emanuel Baron Swedenborg was born at Stockholm in 1688, and died in London in 1772. He was a person of great intellectual attainments, a member of several of the learned societies of Europe, and the author of very voluminous philosophical treatises. In 1745 he separated himself from all secular pursuits, relinquished his official labours in the Swedish State, and commenced the career which led to a religious movement. In that year, and thenceforth, he was favoured, he reports, with continual communications from the spiritual world, being oftentimes admitted into heaven itself and there indulged with splendid visions of angelic glory and felicity. The power was given him to converse with these celestial residents; and from their revelations, sometimes made directly to himself and sometimes gathered by him from the course of their deliberations, he obtained the most important of his doctrines. His own account of the matter is thus stated in a letter to a friend:—"I have been called to a holy office by the Lord Himself, who most graciously manifested Himself before me, His servant, in the year 1745, and then opened my sight into the spiritual world, and gave me to speak with spirits and angels, as I do even to this day. From that time I began to publish the many arcana which I have either seen, or which have been revealed to me, concerning heaven and hell, concerning the state of man after death, concerning true divine worship, and concerning the spiritual sense of the Word, besides other things of the highest importance, conducive to salvation and wisdom."

Origin.
Baron Sweden-
borg.

The general result of these communications was to convince the Baron that the sacred writings have two senses—one their natural, the other their spiritual, sense; the latter of which it was his high commission to unfold. The natural sense is that which is alone received by other Christian Churches—the words of Scripture being understood to have the same signification (and no other) which they bear in ordinary human intercourse; the spiritual sense is that which, in the judgment of the New Church, is concealed within the natural sense of these same words,—each word or phrase possessing, in addition to its ordinary meaning, an interior significance corresponding with some spiritual truth.

Doctrine of Correspondences.

10. THE NEW CHURCH.

The principal tenets he deduced from this interior meaning of the Holy Word, and which his followers still maintain, are these:—That the Last Judgment has already been accomplished (viz. in 1757);—that the former “Heaven and Earth” are passed away; that the “New Jerusalem,” mentioned in the Apocalypse, has already descended, in the form of the “New Church;” and that, consequently, the second Advent of the Lord has even now been realized, in a spiritual sense, by the exhibition of His power and glory in the New Church thus established.

The usual doctrine of the Trinity is not received; the belief of the New Church being, “that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one in the person of “our Lord Jesus Christ, comparatively as soul, body, and proceeding operation “are one in every individual man.”

The New Church also rejects the doctrine of justification by faith alone, and the imputed righteousness of Christ: salvation, it inculcates, cannot be obtained except by the combination of good works with faith. “To fear God, “and to work righteousness, is to have charity; and whoever has charity, “whatever his religious sentiments may be, will be saved.”

The resurrection, it is believed, will not be that of the material body, but of a spiritual body; and this will not immediately pass into a final state of being, but be subject to a kind of purgatory where those who are interiorly good will receive truth corresponding with their state of goodness, and thus be fitted for heaven; while those who are interiorly evil will reject all truth, and thus be among the lost.

Rites.

The Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord’s Supper are administered in the New Church. The former is believed to be “a sign and a medium, attended “with a divine influence, of introduction into the Lord’s Church; and it “means that the Lord will purify our minds from wicked desires and bad “thoughts, if we are obedient to His holy word.” The latter is believed to be “a sign and a medium, attended with a divine influence, for introducing the “Lord’s true children, as to their spirits, into heaven; and it means that the “Lord feeds their souls with His divine goodness and truth.”

Mode of worship.

The mode of worship adopted by the followers of Swedenborg resembles in its general form that of most other Christian bodies: the distribution of subjects in their Liturgy, and the composition of their hymns and prayers, being, of course, special; but no particular form is considered to be binding on each society.

Polity.

The general affairs of the New Church are managed by a Conference, which meets yearly, composed of ministers and laymen in conjunction; the proportion of the latter being determined by the size of the respective congregations which they represent: a society of from 12 to 50 members sending one representative, and societies of from 50 to 100 members and those of upwards of 100 members sending each two and three representatives respectively. There is nothing, however, in Swedenborg’s writings to sanction any particular form of Church-government.

Religious Societies.

The principal societies for disseminating the doctrines of the New Church are, the “Swedenborg Printing Society,” established in 1810, and the “Missionary and Tract Society,” established in 1821. The income of the former, for 1852-3, from subscriptions and donations, was 333*l.*; and that of the latter, for 1851-2 was 235*l.* The number of tracts issued was 23,942. Missionaries are employed in different parts of England.

Among the first disciples of the new faith were two clergymen of the Church of England, [the Rev. Thomas Hartley, (who translated the work on "Heaven and Hell,")] and the Rev. John Clowes (who translated the "Arcana Cœlestia," &c.). In December 1783, eleven years after Swedenborg's decease, an advertisement brought 5 persons to meet together for reading and conversation; which number had increased to thirty in 1787. About this time the formation of a definite religious society was commenced; provision was made for public worship; and a system of ministerial ordination was adopted. At the 15th conference, held in Manchester in August 1822, there were 8 ministers and 37 delegates, representing 24 congregations. At the Census of 1851 the number of congregations was ascertained to be 50; of which the greater number were in Lancashire and Yorkshire. It is considered, however, by members of the body, that the mere number of their chapels gives a very inadequate idea of the prevalence of their opinions: many, they say, ostensibly connected with other churches, entertain the prominent doctrines of the New Church.

10. THE NEW CHURCH.
Numbers.

11. THE PLYMOUTH BRETHREN.

11.
THE BRETHREN.

Those to whom this appellation is applied receive it only as descriptive of their individual state as Christians—not as a name by which they might be known collectively as a distinct religious sect. It is not from any common doctrinal peculiarity or definite ecclesiastical organization that they have the appearance of a separate community; but rather from the fact that, while all other Christians are identified with some particular section of the Church of God, the persons known as "Brethren" utterly refuse to be identified with any. Their existence is, in fact, a protest against all sectarianism; and the primary ground of their secession from the different bodies to which most of them have once belonged, is, that the various tests by which, in all these bodies, the communion of true Christians with each other is prevented or impeded, are unsanctioned by the Word of God. They see no valid reason why the Church (consisting of all true believers) which is really one, should not be also visibly united, having as its only bond of fellowship and barrier of exclusion, the reception or rejection of those vital truths by which the Christian is distinguished from the unbeliever. Looking at existing churches, it appears to them that all are faulty in this matter; national churches by adopting a too lax—dissenting churches by adopting a too limited—criterion of membership. The former, it appears to Brethren, by considering as members all within a certain territory, mingle in one body the believers and the unbelievers; while the latter, by their various tests of doctrine or of discipline, exclude from their communion many who are clearly and undoubtedly true members of the universal Church. The Brethren, therefore, may be represented as consisting of all such as, practically holding all the truths essential to salvation, recognize each other as, on that account alone, true members of the only Church. A difference of opinion upon aught besides is not regarded as sufficient ground for separation; and the Brethren, therefore, have withdrawn themselves from all those bodies in which tests, express or virtual, on minor points, are made the means of separating Christians from each other.

In the judgment of the Brethren, the disunion now existing in the general Church is the result of a neglect to recognize the Holy Spirit as its all-sufficient guide. Instead, they say, of a reliance on His promised presence and sovereignty as Christ's vicar on earth, ever abiding to assert and maintain His Lordship in the Church according to the written Word, men, by their creeds and articles, have questioned the sufficiency of Scripture as interpreted to all by Him, and, by their ministerial and ritual appointments, have assumed to specify the channels through which only can His blessings be communicated. All these various human forms and systems are believed by Brethren to be destitute of scriptural authority, and practically restrictive of the Holy Spirit's operations.

THE BRETHREN.

Chiefly with regard to ministry are these opinions urged; the usual method of ordaining special persons to the office, being held to be unscriptural and prejudicial. They conceive that Christians in general confound ministry (i.e. the exercise of a spiritual gift) with local charges, as eldership, &c. Such charges, they infer from Scripture, required the sanction of Apostles or their delegates, to validate the appointment (Acts xiv. 23., Titus i. 5.); whereas the "gifts" never needed any human authorization (Acts xviii. 24-28, Rom. xii., 1 Cor. xii-xvi., Phil. i. 14., 1 Peter iv. 9, 10.) Further they urge that while Scripture warrants the Church to expect a perpetuity of "gifts"—as evangelists, pastors, teachers, exhorters, rulers, &c.—because they are requisite for the work of the ministry (Ephes. iv. 7-13)—it nowhere guarantees a permanent ordaining power, without which the nomination or ordaining of elders is valueless. All believers are, it is affirmed, true spiritual priests capacitated for worship (Heb. x. 19-25), and any who possess the qualifications from the Lord are authorized to evangelise the world or instruct the Church; and such have not alone the liberty, but also an obligation to employ whatever gift may be entrusted to their keeping. Hence, in their assemblies, Brethren have no pre-appointed person to conduct or share in the proceedings; all is open to the guidance of the Holy Ghost at the time, so that he who believes himself to be so led of the Spirit, may address the meeting, &c. This arrangement is considered to be indicated as the proper order in 1 Cor. xiv.—to flow from the principle laid down in 1 Cor. xii.,—and to be traceable historically in the acts of the Apostles. By adopting it the Brethren think that they avoid two evils by which all existing sects are more or less distinguished; the first, the evil of not employing talents given to believers for the Church's benefit—the second, the evil of appointing as the Church's teachers men in whom the gifts essential for the work have not yet been discovered. The Brethren, therefore, recognize no separate orders of "clergy" and "laity"—all are looked upon as equal in position (Matt. xxiii. 8., 1 Cor. x. 17, xii. 12-20, &c.), differing only as to "gifts" of ruling, teaching, preaching, and the like (Rom. xii. 4-8., 1 Cor. xii. 18, 28, &c.). The ordinances, consequently, of baptism, when administered, and the Lord's Supper, which is celebrated weekly, need no special person to administer or preside (Acts ix. 10-18, x. 48, xx. 7, 1 Cor. xi.) Another feature of some importance is, that wherever gifted men are found among the Brethren, they, in general, are actively engaged in preaching and expounding, &c. on their own individual responsibility to the Lord and quite distinct from the Assembly. So that though they may occasionally use the buildings where the Brethren meet, it is in no way as ministers of the Brethren but of Christ.

The number of places of worship which the Census officers in England and Wales returned as frequented by the Brethren was 132; but probably this number is below the truth, in consequence of the objection which they entertain to acknowledge any sectarian appellation. Several congregations may be included with the number (96) described as "Christians" only.

1. ROMAN CATHOLICS.

The Toleration Act of 1688, by which the Protestant Dissenters were relieved from many of the disabilities that previously attached to them, procured no change in the position of the Roman Catholics. They still remained subjected to the penalties inflicted by the various statutes which, since Elizabeth's accession, had been passed for their discouragement. These were exceedingly severe. Apart from the punishments awarded for the semi-political offence of denying, or refusing to admit the Sovereign's supremacy, the Acts of Recusancy (1 Eliz. c. 2., and 23 Eliz. c. 1.) exposed them to considerable fines for non-attendance at the service of the Established Church; and by other statutes they were not permitted to establish schools in England, nor to send their children to be taught abroad—they were excluded from all civil and military offices, from seats in either House of Parliament, and from the practice of the law,—they were not allowed to vote at Parliamentary Elections—proselytes to popery, and those who were the means of their conversion, were subjected to the penalties of treason—and, by various oaths and tests as well as by express provision, they were hindered in the exercise of their religious worship, and prevented from promulgating their doctrines. Their condition was, in fact, deteriorated in the reign of William III.—some enactments of especial rigor being sanctioned.*

Whether from the effect of these enactments, or from the natural progress of the principles of Protestantism, it is certain that at this time the number of professing Roman Catholics in England, who, in the reign of Elizabeth, were, according to Mr. Butler, a majority, or, according to Mr. Hallam, a third of the population, had considerably declined. A Report presented to William, divides the freeholders of England and Wales, as follows—

Conformists	-	-	-	-	2,477,254
Nonconformists	-	-	-	-	108,676
Papists	-	-	-	-	13,856
					2,599,786

And the number of persons of the Roman Catholic faith is said to be only 27,696. This statement, allowing for all probable deficiencies, sufficiently exhibits the great diminution which, from various causes, had occurred since the period of the Reformation.

Not much alteration in the position of the Roman Catholics took place for nearly a century after the Revolution. As the temper of the times grew milder, many of the penal laws were not enforced; though, while the throne remained exposed to the pretensions of the Stuart family, the laws themselves continued on the Statute Book: indeed, some further measures were enacted during the agitations consequent upon the Catholic Rebellion of 1715. When, however, in the person of George III., the Brunswick dynasty was firmly settled on the throne, a course of mitigating legislation was commenced, which gradually relieved the Roman Catholics from all restraints upon their worship, and from nearly all the incapacities attached to their religion. In 1778, the first remedial Act was passed, repealing the provision in the 10th and 12th of William III., by which the Catholics were disabled from taking lands by descent. The Gordon Riots of 1780, rather aided than retarded the advance of public sentiment towards additional relief; and, in 1791, Mr. Pitt, (having obtained from the chief continental universities, unanimous opinions that the Pope possessed no civil authority in England, that he cannot absolve the subjects of a sovereign from their allegiance, and that the principles of the Roman Catholic faith do not excuse or justify a breach of faith with heretics), procured the passing of another bill, by which, upon taking a form of oath prescribed, the Catholics were secured against most of the penalties pronounced by former Acts.* They were left, however, still subjected to the Test and Corporation Acts, by which they were excluded from all civil and military offices; were prohibited from sitting in either House of Parliament, and were disabled from presenting to advowsons. The removal of the chief of these remaining disabilities was zealously urged upon the Parliament for many years successively. In 1813 an important measure, framed with this intention, was defeated in the Commons by a majority of only four; while, in 1821, a bill to the same effect passed through the lower House but was rejected by the Peers. At length, in 1828, the Test and Corporation Acts were abrogated, and in 1829 the Catholic Emancipation Act bestowed on Roman Catholics substantially the same amount of toleration which was granted to the Protestant Dissenters.

Concurrently with the alleviation of their civil state, the number of the Catholics appears to have been gradually augmenting. In 1767 a return reports their number to be 67,916; and another return in 1780 enumerates 69,376. About this time, the number of chapels was about 200. The following is extracted from a Roman Catholic work:† it shows the progressive increase in the number of such chapels in England and Wales since 1824:

The number of chapels from which returns have been received at the Census Office is 570; with sittings (after an allowance for 48 chapels making no return upon this point) for 186,111. The number of attendants on the Census-Sunday (making an estimated addition for 27 chapels the returns from which were silent on this point) was: Morning, 252,783; Afternoon, 53,967; Evening, 76,880. will be observed, that in the morning the number of attendants was more than the number of sittings: this is explained by the fact that in many Roman Catholic chapels there is more than one morning service, attended by different individuals.

(THE IRVINGITES).

The following sketch, supplied by a member of this body, will perhaps convey, with certain qualifications, a correct idea of its sentiments and position:—

“The body to which this name is applied make no exclusive claim to it: they simply object to be called by any other. They acknowledge it to be the common title of the one Church baptised into Christ, which has existed in all ages, and of which they claim to be members. They have always protested against the application to them of the term ‘Irvingites,’ which appellation they consider to be untrue and offensive, though derived from one whom, when living, they held in high regard as a devoted minister of Christ.

“They do not profess to be, and refuse to acknowledge that they are, separatists from the Church established or dominant in the land of their habitation, or from the general body of Christians therein. They recognize the continuance of the Church from the days of the first apostles, and of the three orders of bishops, priests, and deacons, by succession from the apostles. They justify their meeting in separate congregations from the charge of schism, on the ground of the same being permitted and authorized by an ordinance of paramount authority, which they believe God has restored for the benefit of the whole Church. And so far from professing to be another sect in addition to the numerous sects already dividing the Church, or to be ‘the One Church,’ to the exclusion of all other bodies, they believe that their special mission is to re-unite the scattered members of the one body of Christ.

“The only standards of faith which they recognize are the three creeds of the Catholic Church—the Apostles’ creed, the Nicene or Constantinopolitan creed, and that called the creed of St. Athanasius. The speciality of their religious belief, whereby they are distinguished from other Christian communities, stands in this: that they hold apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors to be abiding ministries in the Church, and that these ministries, “ together with the power and gifts of the Holy Ghost, dispensed and distributed among her members, are necessary for preparing and perfecting the Church for the second advent of the Lord; and that supreme rule in the Church ought to be exercised, as at the first, by twelve apostles, not elected or ordained by men, but called and sent forth immediately by God.

“ The congregations which have been authorized as above stated are placed under the pastoral rule of angels or bishops, with whom are associated, in the work of the ministry, priests and deacons. The deacons are a distinct and separate order of ministers taken from the midst of, and chosen by, the respective congregations in which they are to serve, and are ordained either by apostles or by angels receiving commission thereunto. The priests are first called to their office by the word through the prophets, (“no man taking this honour to himself;”) and then ordained by apostles; and from among the priests, by a like call and ordination, are the angels set in their places.

“ With respect to the times of worship, the Holy Eucharist is celebrated, and the communion administered, every Lord’s day, and more or less frequently during the week, according to the number of priests in each particular congregation; and, where the congregations are large, the first and last hours of every day, reckoning from 6 A.M. to 6 P.M., are appointed for divine worship; and, if there be a sufficient number of ministers, there are, in addition, prayers daily at 9 A.M. and 3 P.M., with other services for the more special object of teaching and preaching.

“ In the forms of worship observed, the prayers and other devotions to be found in the principal liturgies of the Christian Church are introduced by preference, wherever appropriate; and in all their services the bishops and clergy of the Catholic Church, and all Christian kings, princes, and governors, are remembered before God. It may also be observed, that in their ritual observances and offices of worship external and material things have their place. They contend that, as through the washing of water men are admitted into the Christian covenant, and as bread and wine duly consecrated are ordained to be used not merely for spiritual food but for purposes of sacramental and symbolic agency, so also that the use of other material things, such as oil, lights, incense, &c., as symbols and exponents of spiritual realities, belongs to the dispensation of the Gospel.

“ Besides free-will offerings, the tenth of their increase, including income of every description, is brought up to the Lord (it being regarded as a sacred duty that tithe should be dedicated to His service alone), and is apportioned among those who are separated to the ministry.

“ In England there are about 30 congregations, comprising nearly 6,000 communicants; and the number is gradually on the increase. There are also congregations in Scotland and Ireland, a considerable number in Germany, and several in France, Switzerland, and America.”

Of late years, it is said, the church has made considerable progress, so that from 1846 to 1851 the number of communicants in England has increased by a third, while great success has been achieved on the continent and in America. Returns from 32 chapels (chiefly in the southern counties of England) have been furnished to the Census Office. These contained (allowing for one chapel for which the sittings are not mentioned) accommodation for 7,437 persons. The attendance, on the Census-Sunday, was (making an estimated addition for two chapels with regard to which no information was received) Morning, 3,176; Afternoon, 1,659; Evening, 2,707.

3. THE LATTER DAY SAINTS, OR MORMONS.*

3. THE LATTER
DAY SAINTS, OR MORMONS.

Although, in origin, the Mormon movement is not English, but American, yet, as the new creed, by the missionary zeal of its disciples, has extended into England, and is making some not inconsiderable progress with the poorer classes of our countrymen, it seems desirable to give, as far as the inadequate materials permit, some brief description of a sect, the history of whose opinions, sufferings, and achievements, shows, perhaps, the most remarkable religious movement that has happened since the days of Mahomet.

Joseph Smith, the prophet of the new belief, was born in humble life in 1805, at Sharon in the state of Vermont, from whence in 1815 he removed with his parents to Palmyra, New York. When about 15 years old, being troubled by convictions of his spiritual danger, and perplexed by the multitude of mutually hostile sects, he saw, he says, while praying in a grove, a vision of "two personages," who informed him that his sins were pardoned, and that all existing sects were almost equally erroneous. This vision was repeated three years afterwards, in 1823, when an angel, he reports, informed him that the American Indians were a remnant of the Israelites, and that certain records, written by the Jewish prophets and containing history and prophecy, had, when the Indians fell into depravity, been buried in the earth at a spot which the angel indicated. Smith was further told, that he had been selected as the instrument by which these valuable records should be brought to light; the revelations they contained being necessary for the restoration of that purity of creed and worship from which all the modern churches had alike departed.

Origin and Progress.

Accordingly, upon the 22d of September 1823, Smith, the story runs, discovered in the side of a hill, about four miles from Palmyra in Ontario County, a stone box, just covered by the earth, in which was deposited the "Record,"—a collection of thin plates of gold, held together by three golden rings. Part of this golden book was sealed, but the portion open to inspection was engraven thickly with "Reformed Egyptian" characters. Together with the book he found two crystal lenses "set in the two rims of a bow," apparently resembling an enormous pair of spectacles; this instrument he said was the Urim and Thummim used by ancient seers.

The simple inspection of these treasures was the whole extent of Smith's achievements on his first discovery of them; he was not permitted by the angel to remove them until four years afterwards, on the 22d of September 1827. During the interval he received occasional instruction from his supernatural visitant.

The news of his discovery attracted such attention, and procured him so much obloquy, that, according to the narrative of his biographers, he was exposed to personal violence, and was obliged to fly to Pennsylvania, carrying his golden plates concealed in a barrel of beans.† When thus in some security, he, by the aid of the Urim and Thummim, set to work upon the translation of the unsealed portion, which, when complete, composed a bulky volume, which he called the "Book of Mormon"—"Mormon," meaning, he explained, more good, from "mor," a contraction for more, and "mon," Egyptian for good. "Mormon," too, was the name of a supposed prophet living in the fourth or fifth century, who, after the principal portion of the American Israelites had fallen in battle, and the whole of them become degenerate, engraved on plates a summary of their history and prophecies. These plates, his son, Moroni, in the troublous times which followed, hid for safety in a hill then called Cumora, about the year A.D. 420.

Mormons defend the authenticity of this recital, by asserting the improbability that Smith, an illiterate person, could invent it, and, unaided, write so large and peculiar a volume. To the objection that the golden plates are not produced, they give Smith's own reply to the applications made to him by his disciples for a view—that such an exhibition of them is prohibited by special revelation. Nevertheless, in further proof of Smith's veracity, three "witnesses" were found to testify that they had actually seen the plates, an angel having shewn them; and a similar testimony was borne by eight other "witnesses,"—four of these belonging to a family named Whitmer, and three being the two brothers and the father of Smith. The utmost that Smith did towards allowing access by indifferent parties to the plates, was to give to one of his inquiring followers a copy upon paper of a portion of the plates in the original hieroglyphics, viz., the "Reformed Egyptian." This was submitted by the yet unsatisfied disciple to Professor Anthon of New York, who, however, did not recognise the characters as those of any ancient language known to him. The Mormon advocates appear to think these evidences irresistible.†—Upon the other hand, it is asserted, by opponents of the Saints, that about the years 1809—12, a person of the name of Solomon Spaulding, who had been a clergyman, conceived and executed the design of writing a religious tale, the scenes and narrative of which should be constructed on the theory that the American Indians were the lost ten tribes of Israel. This work, when finished, he entitled "The Manuscript found;" and the purport of the fiction was, to trace the progress of the tribes from Jerusalem to America, and then describe their subsequent adventures in the latter country,—“Mormon” and his son “Moroni” being prominent characters, and Nephi, Lehi, and the Lamanites (names frequently occurring in the Book of Mormon) being also mentioned. The MS. of this production, it is further stated, found its way into the hands of one Sidney Rigdon, who was intimately connected with Smith from the commencement of his career.

The "Book of Mormon" was succeeded by a "Book of Doctrine and Covenants," being a collection of the special revelations made to Smith and his associates upon all points connected with the course and welfare of the church. This was continually enlarged as further revelations, consequent upon the varying fortunes and requirements of the body, were received. Amongst these was one by which the "Aaronic Priesthood" was revived—another by which baptism by immersion was commanded—a third for the institution of "Apostles"—and others for the temporal regulation of the church from time to time.* In these productions the peculiar phraseology of the sacred scriptures was profusely imitated.

It appears that at the end of about three years after Smith's announcement of himself as a prophet, about 30 persons were convinced of the reality of his pretensions, and from this time forward converts rapidly increased. Smith removed to Kirtland, in Ohio, and set up a mill, a store, and a bank.

It was not without opposition that this progress was effected. As appears to be usual upon the rise of new religious sects, the Mormons were accused of holding many outrageous and immoral doctrines, and, amongst them, that of a community of wives. The popular hostility was often violently manifested, and the saints were subjected to much ill-treatment. Smith himself, in 1832, was tarred and feathered by a midnight mob; and, in the following year, the whole of the Mormons in Missouri (amounting to above a thousand persons) were expelled from Independence, Jackson County, which had been described by Smith as the Zion appointed by revelation for the resting-place of the saints. They removed to Clay County, where, in 1837, they were joined by the prophet himself, whose bank in Kirtland had failed. Meantime, the prejudice against the Mormons followed them to their new habitation, and, in 1838, after several sanguinary outbreaks, Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were imprisoned, and the whole community of Mormons were expelled from their possessions in Missouri. They took refuge in the neighbouring state of Illinois. Here, in 1839, their prophet, who had managed to escape from prison, joined them. They now numbered 15,000 souls.

In Illinois, they chose the village of Commerce as their residence, which soon became converted into a considerable town, of which the prophet was appointed mayor. This town they called Nauvoo, or "Beautiful," according to the language of the Book of Mormon. A body of militia, called the Nauvoo Legion, was established—Smith being "General." In 1841, a "revelation" ordered the construction of a splendid temple, towards which object all the saints were to contribute a full tithe of their possessions. It is said that they expended on this structure nearly a million of dollars.

In Nauvoo, the Mormons seem to have increased and prospered greatly: the town extended fast; the temple gradually rose; and the prophet was the absolute head of a comparatively powerful community, which hardly recognised the ordinary laws of the state. In 1843 he became a candidate for the Presidency, and put forth a statement of his views. In 1844, however, occurred the final catastrophe of his life. A Nauvoo paper, having printed certain scandal of him, was, by order of the council of the town, suppressed, and its office rased; on which, the editors retired to Carthage, and obtained a warrant against Smith and his brother. This warrant Smith refused to recognise: the county force prepared to execute it; and the Saints prepared their city for defence. To save the town, however, Smith surrendered on the promise of protection from the governor. This promise proved of little value; for, on the 27th of June 1844, a mob broke into Carthage prison, and Joseph and Hyrum Smith were shot.

Upon the prophet's death there were two competitors for the vacant supremacy—Sidney Rigdon and Brigham Young. The former was the earliest associate of Smith, and professed to be acquainted with "all his secrets;" but, as the prominent advocate of the "Spiritual Wife" doctrine, he was looked upon with disfavour as the virtual author of much of the suspicion and hostility with which the Mormons were regarded. Brigham Young succeeded therefore to the post of "Prophet" (which he still retains), and Rigdon was expelled from the community. An interval of scarcely interrupted progress followed, during which the temple was completed; but in 1845 the troubles were renewed: perpetual conflicts, in which blood was shed, occurred, and the city of Nauvoo itself was regularly besieged. At length the Mormons, conscious of their inability alone to cope with their antagonists, and seeing that no confidence could be reposed upon the law for their protection, undertook (since nothing less would satisfy their enemies) that they would altogether quit the State—commencing their departure in the spring of 1846.

This time it was no mere temporary, neighbouring refuge which the Mormons sought. The elders of the church, aware of the hostility to which it would be constantly exposed in any portion of the populated States, resolved, with equal policy and daring, to escape entirely from the settled territory, and to seek far off, beyond the Rocky Mountains, some secluded and unoccupied retreat in which they could, secure from molestation, build their earthly "Zion," and, by gathering thither from all quarters of the world the converts to their faith, become a thriving and a powerful community, too potent to be further interfered with. This remarkable pilgrimage, involving the removal of some thousands of men, women, children, cattle, and stores, over thousands of untrodden miles—across wide unbridged rivers—by the difficult passes of snow-capped mountains—and through deserts, prairies, and tribes of predatory Indians—was at once commenced. A party of pioneers set out from Nauvoo in February 1846, when it was still winter—the waggons crossing the Mississippi on the ice. These were to prepare the way for the main body of the citizens, who, according to stipulation, might remain in Nauvoo till these preparations were completed. Their departure was, however, hastened by the fresh hostility of their opponents, who—concluding from the progress still continued in the decorations of the temple that the Mormons secretly intended to elude their promise and return—attacked the town in September 1846, and expelled the whole of its remaining population. These then followed and overtook the pioneering party, which, after dreadful sufferings from cold and heat, from hunger and disease, had, finding it impossible to reach their destination till the following year, encamped upon the banks of the Missouri, on the lands of the Omahas and Pottawatamies. Here they had sown the land to some extent with grain, the crops of which were to be reaped by their successors. After a dreary winter, spent in this location, they began their march towards their final settlement. In April 1847 the first detachment of 143, with 70 waggons, crossed the Rocky Mountains; arriving at the basin of the Great Salt Lake, in the latter portion of July, in time to sow the land for an autumn crop. The second party started in the summer with 566 waggons and a great supply of grain. The others followed in the course of 1848—their passage much alleviated by the tracks prepared by their predecessors and the harvests left for them to gather.

The valley of the Great Salt Lake is a territory of considerable extent, enclosed on all sides by high rocky mountains. The Lake itself is nearly 300 miles in circumference, with islands rising from its surface to an elevation of some thousand feet: its shores are covered in some places with the finest salt, and its water is as buoyant as the waves of the Dead Sea. Portions of the land are desert; but a vast expanse is wonderfully fertile and abounds in all facilities for pasturage and cultivation. Here, the Mormons have now firmly fixed themselves, and made, since 1848, continual progress. Further settlements have been established, and several cities founded: that of the Great Salt Lake itself has a plot of several acres destined to support a temple whose magnificence shall far exceed the splendour of the former Nauvoo edifice. Relying on the inexhaustible resources of the region to sustain innumerable inhabitants, the principal endeavour of the rulers is, to gather there as many immigrants as possible professing the same faith. They calculate that thus, established in an almost inaccessible retreat, with numbers continually augmenting, they will soon be able to defy external enmity and rear upon a lasting basis their ecclesiastical republic. Missionary agents are despatched to almost every portion of the world to make fresh converts and facilitate their transit to America. In England these endeavours have been followed by no slight success: it is computed that at least as many as 30,000 persons here belong to the community, and nearly 20,000 have already, it is said, departed for the Great Salt Lake. This settlement itself, has now, by the name of "Utah" been admitted to the United States Confederacy; but it seems, from a report of the judges sent there by the recent President, that the authority of the federal government is virtually set at nought; the laws and their administration being always found accordant with the pleasure of the Morimon rulers.

3. THE LATTER
DAY SAINTS, OR MORMONS.

A printed "Creed" presents the following summary of their opinions, but omits some rather material points:—

"We believe in God the eternal Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.

"We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgressions.

"We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

"We believe that these ordinances are: 1st. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

"2d. Repentance. 3d. Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins.

"4th. Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit. 5th. The Lord's "Supper.

"We believe that men must be called of God by inspiration, and by laying on of hands by those who are duly commissioned to preach the Gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

"We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church, viz., apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, &c.

"We believe in the powers and gifts of the everlasting Gospel, viz., the gift of faith, discerning of spirits, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, tongues and the interpretation of tongues, wisdom, charity, brotherly love, &c.

"We believe in the Word of God recorded in the Bible. We also believe the Word of God recorded in the Book of Mormon and in all other good books.

"We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal; and we believe that he will yet reveal many more great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God, and Messiah's second coming.

"We believe in the literal gathering of Israel, and in the restoration of the ten tribes; that Zion will be established upon the Western continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth a thousand years; and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisaical glory.

"We believe in the literal resurrection of the body, and that the dead in Christ will rise first, and that the rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years are expired.

"We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, unmolested, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how or where they may.

"We believe in being subject to kings, queens, presidents, rulers, and magistrates, in obeying, honouring, and sustaining the law.

"We believe in being honest, true, chaste, temperate, benevolent, virtuous, and upright, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul,—we 'believe all things,' we 'hope all things,' we have endured very many things, and hope to be able to 'endure all things.' Every thing virtuous, lovely, praiseworthy, and of good report we seek after, looking forward to the 'recompense of reward.'"

A rather more specific outline of some points of their belief is given by one of their apostles. According to him, the Saints believe that all mankind, in consequence of Adam's sin, are in a state of ruin: from this, however, they are all delivered by the sacrifice of Christ, and are made secure of everlasting happiness, unless they commit any actual sin. Infants, therefore, being irresponsible, will be eternally redeemed; and such among the people of the earth as have not had the benefit of revelation will receive a mitigated punishment. The rest, in order to be saved from endless ruin, must comply with four conditions :—(1) they must believe in Christ's atonement ; (2) they must repent of their transgressions ; (3) they must receive baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, administered only by one authorized of Christ ; and (4) they must receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost—this ordinance also being, like that of baptism, only to be administered by duly authorized apostles or elders. All who comply with these conditions obtain forgiveness of their sins and are made partakers of the Holy Ghost—enjoying, too, the gifts of prophecy and healing, visions and revelations, and the power of working miracles.*

Among the prominent opinions, not included in these statements, are their doctrines of the materiality of the Deity,† and of the twofold order of the priesthood, viz., the Melchisedek and the Aaronic. They are also charged by their opponents with the practice and the sanction of polygamy ; and evidence is not un plentiful of their allowance of something closely similar ; and in their various publications very peculiar doctrines on the subject of marriage are propounded.‡ Their standard books, however, specially denounce the crime.§

Numbers in England.

In England and Wales there were, in 1851, reported by the Census officers as many as 222 places of worship belonging to this body—most of them however being merely rooms. The number of sittings in these places (making an allowance for 53, the accommodation in which was not returned) was 30,783. The attendance on the Census-Sunday (making an estimated addition for 9 chapels from which no intelligence on this point was received) was : Morning, 7,517 ; Afternoon, 11,481 ; Evening, 16,628. The preachers, it appears, are far from unsuccessful in their efforts to obtain disciples : the surprising confidence and zeal with which they promulgate their creed—the prominence they give to the exciting topics of the speedy coming of the Saviour and his personal millennial reign—and the attractiveness to many minds of the idea of an infallible church, relying for its evidences and its guidance upon revelations made perpetually to its rulers,—these, with other influences, have combined to give the Mormon movement a position and importance with the working classes, which, perhaps, should draw to it much more than it has yet received of the attention of our public teachers.

In the pages of "The Seer," a periodical conducted by Orson Pratt, the doctrine of plurality of wives is openly advocated. Marriage, however, is there said to be the exclusive privilege of the righteous—the wicked who marry doing so at their own peril. Whether a man is righteous or wicked is a point to be determined by the prophets of the Mormon Church ; and as this can only be ascertained by the aid of inspiration, it is argued that no marriage can be safely contracted in communities which do not believe in a continuance of revelations.

ISOLATED CONGREGATIONS

(not connected with any particular sect).

ISOLATED
CONGREGATIONS.

IN addition to the congregations which belong to the preceding regularly organized bodies, there are individual congregations, mostly altogether independent of each other, or at all events without the formal coalescence which is requisite to constitute a "sect." Five classes may be noticed of these congregations:

1. Those in which the members of some two or more of the preceding sects unite in worship—probably from inability alone and severally each to support a place of worship and a minister. Of these amalgamated congregations the most numerous are those (to the number of 61) in which the Independents join with Baptists. The whole of these combinations, and their frequency, are shewn as follows:—

1. Combinations of sects.

Independents and Baptists, 61 congregations; Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans, 2 congregations; Independents and Wesleyans, 3 congregations; Independents and Calvinistic Methodists, 1 congregation; Independents and Primitive Methodists, 1 congregation; Baptists and Wesleyans, 2 congregations; Baptists, Wesleyans, and Moravians, 1 congregation; Presbyterians and Particular Baptists, 1 congregation; Mixed (constituent sects not stated), 54 congregations; Wesleyan Christian Union, 1 congregation; Neutral, 1 congregation.

It must not, indeed, be thought that these are the only instances in which the members of, or sympathizers with, particular communities, are found together, worshipping in common: few congregations are without a certain number who, while strictly claimable by other bodies, find their difference of sentiment on ritual observances no obstacle to union when the fundamental doctrines preached are similar. But the congregations named above, it is assumed, are not, as in the cases just supposed, ostensibly connected either with the one or with the other of the bodies to which, in theory, the various attendants are attached; but, on the contrary, exist apart and independently, by special understanding and arrangement of the two or more uniting parties.

2. Another class of miscellaneous congregations is composed of such as are formed by the adherents to some doctrine to which special value is attached, and which is thus maintained with greater prominence than by the regular churches. To this class the following may be referred:—

2. Congregations
based upon the profession of peculiar doctrines.

Calvinists, 81 congregations; Calvinists (supralapsarians), 1 congregation; Huntingtonians, 1 congregation; Universalists, 2 congregations; Millenarians, 5 congregations; Predestinarians, 1 congregation; Trinitarian Predestinarians, 1 congregation.

3. A third group may be made of congregations, which, disliking to be identified with anything appearing to be sectarian, refuse to call themselves by any but a very general or a merely negative appellation; as,

3. Unsectarian
congregations.

Christians, 96 congregations; Christian Association, 8 congregations; Orthodox Christians, 1 congregation; New Christians, 1 congregation; Christ's Disciples, 3 congregations; Primitive Christians, 1 congregation; New Testament Christians, 2 congregations; Original Christians, 1 congregation; United Christians, 1 congregation; Gospel Pilgrims, 2 congregations; Free Gospel Christians, 14 congregations; Believers, 1 congregation; Non Sectarian, 7 congregations; No particular Denomination, 7 congregations; Evangelists, 4 congregations; Gospel Refugees, 1 congregation; Freethinking Christians, 2 congregations.

ISOLATED

4. Sect not particularized.

4. Others, while admitting a connexion with some one of the more extensive sections into which the Christian Church is now divisible, have either forgotten or declined to specify a more minute association; such are,

Protestant Christians, 3 congregations; Evangelical Protestants, 1 congregation; Protestant Free Church, 1 congregation; Trinitarians, 1 congregation; Protestant Dissenters, 24 congregations; Dissenters, 6 congregations; Evangelical Dissenters, 3 congregations; Episcopalian Seceders, 1 congregation.

5. Missionary
congregations.

5. A fifth class of separate congregations may be formed of those which are the offspring of the Missionary operations of the other bodies, acting either individually or in combination; such are the congregations raised and supported by the London City Mission, 7 congregations; Railway Mission, 1 congregation; Town Mission, 17 congregations; Home Mission, 1 congregation; Mission Society, 8 congregations; Seamen's Bethel, 11 congregations; Christian Mission, 3 congregations.

Doubtless, these will not include the whole of the congregations gathered and sustained by the agency of these societies and others having kindred objects: many, it is likely, are returned with some particular denomination.

6. Miscellaneous.

6. A residue will still be left of congregations difficult to classify. Such are the following:—

Free Church, 8 congregations; Teetotalers, 1 congregation; Doubtful, 43 congregations; Benevolent Methodists, 1 congregation; General, 2 congregations; Israelites, 1 congregation; Christian Israelites, 3 congregations; Stephenites, 1 congregation; Inghamites, 9 congregations; Temperance Wesleyans, 1 congregation; Temperance Christians, 1 congregation; Freethinkers, 2 congregations; Rational Progressionists, 1 congregation; Southcottians, 4 congregations.

The last of these, perhaps, deserves some notice. It derives its name from Johanna Southcott, who was born in 1750 in humble circumstances in Devonshire. In 1792 she commenced a career as a prophetess, making various announcements of events which were, she said, about to happen, and of revelations made to her respecting the millennial advent of the Saviour. Several thousand persons, it is said, believed her mission, amongst whom she distributed sealed packets which were thought by their possessors to contain the virtue of "charms." Being afflicted with a malady which gave to her the aspect of pregnancy, she prophesied that she was destined to become the mother of a Second Shiloh; and accordingly a splendid cradle and some other considerable preparations for the birth were made by her disciples; but her death, which happened shortly afterwards, displayed the baselessness of their anticipations. Nevertheless her followers would not resign their confidence that her prognostications would be certainly fulfilled; asserting that, for the accomplishment of her predictions, she would shortly re-appear, restored to life. It seems that there are still in England four congregations of persons entertaining this belief.

FOREIGN CHURCHES.

FOREIGN CHURCHES.

The previous notices comprise the whole of the Religious Bodies which are native to this country, or which act upon the native population. Of the Foreign Churches, it is only necessary to enumerate the congregations which belong to each. Foreign Protestants have eleven congregations; thus distributed—LUTHERANS, 6; FRENCH PROTESTANTS, 3; REFORMED CHURCH OF THE NETHERLANDS, 1; GERMAN PROTESTANT REFORMERS, 1. Other Foreign Christian Churches have 5 congregations, namely—GERMAN CATHOLICS, 1; ITALIAN REFORMERS, 1; and GREEK CHURCH, 3.

The JEWS (a nation and a Church at once) have 53 synagogues, with accommodation (after an estimate for three defective returns) for 8,438 worshippers.

If the preceding sketch has given any adequate idea of the faith and order of the various churches which possess in common the religious area of England, it will probably be seen to what a great extent, amidst so much ostensible confusion and diversity, essential harmony prevails. Especially is this apparent if we limit our regard to Protestant communions; which, indeed, comprise together nineteen-twentieths of our religious population. With respect to these, the differences which outwardly divide are not to be compared with the concordances which secretly, perhaps unconsciously, unite. The former, with but few exceptions, have relation almost wholly to the mere formalities of worship—not to the essential articles of faith. The fundamental doctrines of the Reformation, as embodied in the standards of the Church of England, are professed and preached by Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, Methodists, and many minor sects, comprising more than nineteen-twentieths of the Nonconforming Protestant community; and though the different organization of these several bodies seems to present externally an aspect of disunion, probably a closer scrutiny will show that they are separated only as to matters whose importance, even if considerable, is not vital, and that thus they may, without excess of charity, be recognized as truly, though invisibly, united to the general Church of Christ. Perhaps in a people like the English—trained to the exercise of private judgment, and inured to self-reliance—absolute agreement on religious subjects never can be realized; and certainly if, at the trifling cost of a merely superficial difference, the ever various sympathies or prejudices of the people can obtain congenial resting place, we scarcely can behold with discontent a state of things by which, at worst, external rivalry is substituted for internal disaffection; while this very rivalry itself—perhaps in part, and growingly, a generous emulation—tends to diffuse the Gospel more extensively, since thus religious zeal and agency are roused and vastly multiplied. Rather, perhaps, we shall be led to recognize with some degree of satisfaction the inevitable existence of such co-operative diversity; and shall perceive, with Milton, that “while the Temple “ of the Lord is building, some cutting, some squaring the marble, some “ hewing the cedars, there must needs be many schisms and many dissections “ made in the quarry and in the timber ere the House of God can be built:
“ and when every stone is laid artfully together, it cannot be united into a “ continuity, it can but be contiguous in this world; neither can every piece of “ the building be of one form; nay, rather the perfection consists in this, that “ out of many moderate varieties and brotherly dissimilarities, that are not Substantial Agreement of most of the Bodies previously described.

“vastly disproportional, arises the goodly and graceful symmetry that commends “the whole pile and structure.”* ”

Amongst the constituencies, in the committees, and upon the platforms, of these several societies, are found, conjoining in harmonious action, ministers and members of perhaps a dozen different sects; while one considerable organization† has for its exclusive object the promotion of fraternal sentiment and intercourse between the various Evangelical Communions. Other indications likewise are not wanting, which, combined with these, may reasonably raise the hope that many of the Protestant communities are gradually tending to a closer union and a more combined activity, proceeding from a heartier appreciation of the vital doctrines all alike profess and a diminished ardor on behalf of those subordinate arrangements of church discipline and order with regard to which they find themselves obliged to differ.

Much, no doubt, of this substantial concord is attributable to our system of religious freedom, which, allowing the unchecked development of all ecclesiastical peculiarities, has thus conferred on none the artificial value which results from prohibition; and perhaps the expectation may be reasonably entertained that, under this same influence, the spirit of uncompromising peace will gain yet further potency—that liberty to separate on minor, will beget still more the disposition to unite on greater, questions—and that thus the Toleration Act will prove, in its results, to have been the most effective Act of Uniformity.

If these remarks have in them any considerable share of truth, it will be evident how necessary was the task of showing, in connexion with a statement of existing means of spiritual instruction, how many of the various bodies are pursuing, though by different paths, the same grand objects; so that, when endeavouring to estimate our actual deficiency, we may not prematurely and despondingly exaggerate our all-too-formidable need, but recollect that though, in certain districts, there may be an absence of machinery belonging to particular communities, the same essential truths may be both faithfully and effectively imparted through the agency of other churches. Many spots there are, unhappily, in England, where the whole provision made by all the churches put together is inadequate to the occasion: such a deficiency as this it is which properly betokens “spiritual destitution”; and the actual extent of this deficiency we now may, aided by the previous explanations, safely pass to indicate.

* Areopagitica; or Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.

† The “Evangelical Alliance,” founded in 1846. The basis of this association is an agreement in holding and maintaining what are generally understood to be evangelical views in regard to the most important matters of doctrine; and its great object is “to aid in manifesting the unity which exists among the true disciples of Christ.” This object is sought to be attained principally by annual conferences of members and by continual correspondence with Christian brethren in different parts of the world.

SPIRITUAL PROVISION AND DESTITUTION.

THERE are two methods of pursuing a statistical inquiry with respect to the religion of a people. You may either ask each individual, directly, what particular form of religion he professes; or, you may collect such information as to the religious acts of individuals as will equally, though indirectly, lead to the same result. The former method was adopted, some few years ago, in Ireland, and is generally followed in the continental states when such investigations as the present are pursued. At the recent Census, it was thought advisable to take the latter course; partly because it had a less inquisitorial aspect,—but especially because it was considered that the outward conduct of persons furnishes a better guide to their religious state than can be gained by merely vague professions. In proportion, it was thought, as people truly are connected with particular sects or churches, will be their activity in raising buildings in which to worship and their diligence in afterwards frequenting them; but where there is an absence of such practical regard for a religious creed, but little weight can be attached to any purely formal acquiescence. This inquiry, therefore, was confined to obvious facts relating to two subjects.—1. The amount of ACCOMMODATION which the people have provided for religious worship; and, 2. The number of persons, as ATTENDANTS, by whom this provision is made use of.

1.—ACCOMMODATION.

IF, by a happy miracle, on Sunday, March the 30th 1851, an universal feeling of devotion had impressed our population, and impelled towards the public sanctuaries all whom no impediment, of physical inability or needful occupation, hindered; if the morning or the evening invitation of the service-bell had called, no less from the crowded courts of populous towns and the cottages of scattered villages than from the city mansions and the rural halls, a perfect complement of worshippers; for what proportion of the 17,927,609 inhabitants of England would accommodation in religious buildings have been necessary?

The reply to this inquiry will determine mainly the extent by which our actual supply of spiritual ministrations is inadequate to the demand.

Various computations have been made respecting the number of sittings proper to be furnished for a given population. With respect to towns, it has been thought by some that accommodation for 50 per cent. would be sufficient; while others have considered that provision for not less than 75 per cent. should be afforded. Dr. Chalmers took the mean of these two estimates, and concluded that five eighths, or 62½ per cent., of the people of a town might attend religious services, and ought to have facilities for doing so.*

The maximum for rural districts is put lower than that for towns; the distance of the church from people's residences operating as an unavoidable check upon attendance. But, as, for the purpose of this estimate, the rural population will consist of only those who live remote as well from villages containing churches as from towns,—in fact, of only those who are remote from any place of worship,—the proportion deemed to be sufficient for a town may be applied, with very slight reduction, to the whole of England—town and country both together;

Maximum of required accommodation in places of worship.

Various estimates.

* Christian and Economic Polity of a Nation, vol. i. p.123. Mr. E. Baines (an excellent authority on subjects of this nature) assumes that accommodation for 50 per cent. of the gross population would be ample.—Letters on the Manufacturing Districts.

and, according to the best authorities, this proportion seems to lie between 50 and 60 per cent. of the entire community.

Considerable deduction to be made from the total population.
1. Young children.

From many valid causes, there will always be a considerable number of persons absent from public worship. First, a large deduction from the total population must be made on account of infants and young children; of whom there were in England and Wales, in 1851, as many as 4,440,466 under ten years of age—2,348,107 of this number being under five. Of course, opinions vary as to the earliest age at which a child, in order to acquire a habit of devotion, should be taken to a place of worship: some begin occasional attendance before they reach five years of age, while others are retained at home much later. Many parents too, no doubt, conceive that the attendance of their children at a Sunday-school is a sufficient tax upon their tender strength. Perhaps it will not, therefore, be unreasonable to assume that, either on account of immaturity or Sunday-school engagements, about 3,000,000 children will be always justifiably away from public worship.

2. Invalids and aged persons.

There will also always be in any large community a certain number kept at home by sickness. It is estimated that the proportion of persons constantly sick, or incapacitated by infirmities of age for active duties, is about five per cent. of the population; and, as the degree of indisposition which in general detains a prudent person from church or chapel is much slighter than that contemplated in this calculation, we shall probably not err in taking nearly seven per cent. of the 15,000,000 (which remain after deducting the 3,000,000 children who have already been supposed to be absent), and putting down 1,000,000 persons as the number usually and lawfully away from public worship on the ground of sickness or debility.*

3. Persons in charge of houses &c.

Another large deduction must be made for those who are necessarily left in charge of houses and in attendance upon the two preceding classes. There were, in 1851, in England and Wales, 3,278,039 inhabited houses. If some of these in country parishes were left untenanted, locked up, while the inmates were at service, others doubtless were in charge of more than one domestic; so that we may safely take the whole 3,278,039 houses as representing so many individuals legitimately absent from religious edifices on account of household duties. Many of these, no doubt, would discharge a double occupation, as guardians of the house and attendants upon children or invalids; but some addition must unquestionably be made for a distinct array of nurses, or of parents unavoidably detained at home, and also for the medical practitioners, whose Sunday services can scarcely be dispensed with.

4. Persons employed on public conveyances.

A fourth considerable class, of which a certain number will be always absent from religious worship, is the class employed in connexion with the various public conveyances; as railways, steamboats, omnibuses, coaches, barges on canals, &c.† It is impossible to form an estimate of the precise extent to which employment in this way may be admitted as an adequate excuse for non-attendance on religious ordinances; since opinions are extremely various as to the extent to which the use of conveyances upon the Sunday is to be considered a work of "necessity or mercy." It cannot, however, be doubted that, practically, whatever views are likely to prevail upon the subject of Sabbath labour,

* The number of persons in England and Wales in 1851, aged 70 years and upwards, was 503,305: aged 75 and upwards, there were 253,143: aged 80 and upwards, there were 107,041: aged 85 and upwards, there were 33,201: upwards of 90, there were 7,796: above 95 there were 1,545: and 215 were upwards of 100.

† It is estimated that the number of men engaged, in London alone, upon omnibuses, on the Sunday, is as many as 6,000.

very many persons will be constantly engaged in ministering to the public need of locomotion.

Not attempting any numerical estimate of various minor classes, and designedly not making any deduction on account of Sunday traders, or the criminal population—since the object is to show the amount of accommodation needed for those who are able, not merely for those who are willing, to attend—it seems to follow from the previous computations that about 7,500,000 persons will, of necessity, be absent whenever divine service is celebrated; and, consequently, that sittings in religious buildings cannot be required for more than 10,427,609, being rather more than 58 per cent. of the entire community. It will be convenient for the subsequent calculations to deal with 58 per cent. exactly, and assume that the number always able to attend is 10,398,013.

Result of these deductions.

It by no means results, from this, that the adult portion of the remaining 42 per cent. of the population (7,500,000 in round numbers) is entirely without opportunities of frequenting public worship; for, as there is generally more than one service on the Sunday, it is practicable, and in fact customary, to carry on a system of relief—some who attend service at one period of the day occupying at the other period the place of those who were before prevented; thus enabling these to attend a later service in their turn. This system is especially adopted in the case of domestic servants; consequently, though there is probably always about the same number (viz. 7,500,000) detained at home by lawful causes, this number will not always be composed of the same persons.

Effect of double services.

The custom of double, and sometimes treble, services each Sunday introduces an important element into the question of the number of sittings needful for a given population. It has been shown above, that sittings cannot be wanted for more than 10,398,013 persons (being the full number able to attend at one time). But does it therefore follow that there should be as many sittings as this number of persons? It is obvious that if attendance upon public worship once a day be thought sufficient for each individual, it is possible to conceive a case where, all the churches and chapels being open twice a day, the whole population could attend, though sittings should exist for only half their number. For instance; if in a district, with ten thousand persons able to attend, the places of worship (open twice upon the Sunday) should contain 5,000 sittings, it is possible for the whole ten thousand to attend them, simply by the one half going in the morning and the other in the evening: and if three services are held, a further diminution of the number of sittings might be made without depriving any person of the opportunity of attending once. This, though of course an extreme illustration, cannot fail to show the necessity of settling, ere a trusty calculation can be made of the accommodation needful for the country, whether it is to be assumed that a single sitting may be occupied by more than one person on one Sunday, or whether we must aim at a provision so extensive that every person may be able (if inclined) to attend each Sunday twice or oftener—in fact, at every service. Practically, I believe it will be found that very many persons think their duties as to Sabbath worship adequately discharged by one attendance; and most likely we may safely count upon the permanent continuance of a large class thus persuaded. Still, as no definite conception can be formed of the extent to which this practice is adopted—and as it might reasonably be contended that neglect of any opportunities for worship should not be presumed, but that such an extent of accommodation should be furnished as would utterly exclude excuse for non-attendance—it will be the better plan if, merely indicating the existence of the practice as an element in the question, I assume that the provision needful for the population should consist of at least as many sittings as there are individuals not incapacitated by the causes previously mentioned, viz., 10,398,013, or 58 per cent. Indeed, whatever diminution in the estimate may be supposed to be allowable on account of double services will probably be more than counter-balanced by the absolute necessity there is that nearly every building should possess some surplus of accommodation; for as, practically, it is impossible that each religious body can compute so nicely its position and attractiveness as to provide exactly as many sittings as are wanted from it, and no more,—as some will naturally leave a margin for anticipated progress, which perhaps may not be realized, while others will miscalculate the other way, and grow beyond their utmost expectations,—there must needs be a certain excess of supply beyond demand, continuing as long as there exists a variety of churches, and the liberty for people to prefer one church before another. I am therefore inclined to consider that accommodation for 58 per cent. of the population is no more than would be absolutely needful if all persons able to attend were also willing.

The maximum of accommodation is affected by its distribution over the country.

But, of course, in order to be adequate to the wants of the community, the buildings which should contain these 10,398,013 sittings must be so located on the surface of the country as to bring the accommodation they afford within the reach of all by whom it is required. If many churches and chapels be clustered in a narrow compass, or if several thinly peopled parishes have each a church with more accommodation than is wanted, it will follow that in other portions of the country there must necessarily be some deficiency, unless the aggregate of sittings be raised above 10,398,013. So that what is wanted is, not merely such a number of sittings as shall equal the total number of persons capable of using them, but also such a distribution of these sittings as will render them available by all requiring them. A provision of 10,398,013 sittings for the whole of England would only be sufficient if in every part of England there should prove to be accommodation for as many as 58 per cent. It will presently be shown how far the actual distribution of religious buildings in this country affects the question of the adequacy or inadequacy of existing accommodation.

By what religious bodies should the necessary accommodation be provided?

Having advanced thus far, we meet a question much more difficult and delicate than any which has hitherto encountered us; this is, assuming that 10,398,013 sittings ought to be provided, would the provision be satisfactory supposing that that number could be furnished by the aid of all the various churches and congregations in the aggregate? or is it essential that they should belong to one particular church exclusively? or to a certain number of churches which agree upon particular fundamental doctrines? These are questions which are obviously beyond the range of this Report, and which must be discussed and settled for themselves by the different readers of the Tables. In the meantime, while endeavouring to estimate in some degree the actual extent of “spiritual destitution,” it may fairly be allowed, perhaps, to take the whole accommodation in the gross; since it is probable that yet for many years to come each church will continue to retain a hold upon the sympathies of a portion of our population, which then, of course, as now, will not require, as they would not accept, accommodation in the buildings of other denominations. The course of argument, however, will be of general applicability, and can easily be adapted to the Church of England or to any other body.

Actual provision according to the Census.

What, then, is the number of sittings actually furnished, by the agency of all the various churches, towards the accommodation of the 10,398,013 persons who, if only willing, would be able constantly to occupy them? The returns from 31,943 places of religious worship, many of them of course being simply rooms in houses, give an aggregate of sittings to the number of 9,467,738. But as 2524 other places have omitted to return the number of their sittings, an estimate for these, computed from the average of complete returns*, will raise the total number of sittings reported to the Census Office to 10,212,563. This, when compared with the number calculated as desirable (10,398,013), shows a deficiency in the whole of England and Wales of 185,450.

The point, then, to which we have arrived is this: assuming that the joint provision made by all the sects together may be reckoned in the computation, the deficiency, upon the whole of England and Wales, will be only to the extent of 185,450 sittings (or for only 1·03 per cent. of the population), if the entire provision now existing is found to be so well distributed over the country as that no part has too little and no part too much. We must, therefore, now inquire how far this necessary distribution has been realized.

Adequacy of existing accommodation if equally distributed.

Every portion of the country, I assume, should have accommodation for 58 per cent. of the inhabitants.† It would clearly be of no avail that one part should have more than this per-centage if another part had less; for since, according to the estimate, no more than 58 per cent. of the population could be present at one time at a religious service, it is evident that if in any place the number of sittings would accommodate a much greater proportion than 58 per cent., there would be in that locality a surplus of unused and useless sittings, generally inaccessible to residents in other neighbourhoods, and quite as unavailable as if they had never been provided. What is required is, not alone an aggregate per-centage of 58 per cent. in an extensive area (such as the whole of England, or the whole of an English county); for this would not be any proof of adequate provision, since the rural portions might possess an unavailable abundance, while the urban portions suffered under an extreme deficiency; but that same per-centage in localities of size so circumscribed that inequalities of distribution could but slightly operate. Then, what localities, of definite character, of this appropriate size, can be selected for comparison, by which to estimate more accurately our requirements? Of course, with regard to the Church of England, there should be accommodation for the 58 per cent. in every parish, since the very theory of a parochial arrangement is that the people of a parish should attend the parish church and none besides; but probably it is not needful to investigate so carefully as this. The Registration Districts, or Poor Law Unions, (of which there are in England and Wales 624,) will afford convenient limits for comparison; and if in any of these we find a total amount of accommodation adequate for 58 per cent. of the inhabitants, we shall probably not err to any great extent, (although, no doubt, we shall to some extent,) if we conclude that there is room for 58 per cent. within the reach of all the dwellers in the District. The selection too of Districts as the standards of comparison will obviate the difficulty which, if parishes were taken, would arise with reference to the members of Dissenting Bodies, who, ignoring altogether the parochial system, often cross the limits of the parish where they dwell in order to attend a chapel situate beyond its boundaries. By taking the somewhat wider area of Districts, the disturbance to the calculations from this cause will be reduced to unimportance.

Effect of unequal distribution.

* In this calculation a separate average has been taken for each denomination; but it has not been thought essential to proceed so minutely as to distinguish whether the places of worship supplying defective returns are situate in town or country localities, nor how many of them are separate and entire buildings. It is not probable that any closer scrutiny would materially alter the estimate. Where, however any reliable indication of the number of sittings has been furnished by a statement of the number of attendants, this has been adopted rather than the average.

† This may be taken as sufficiently near. In some parts, however, from peculiar circumstances, it is evident that this proportion will in some degree be varied. There may be a greater number of children or a greater number of servants, &c.—circumstances adequate to alter to a trifling extent the proportion of persons able to attend a place of worship.

The objection, which prevails against a comparison of the total accommodation of England with the total population of England, also applies in some degree against a comparison of the total accommodation with the total population of a district. Unequal distribution may exist in the latter case as well as in the former, though, no doubt, to a much less extent. The means of course exist by which a computation could be made for each particular parish; but as this would be a formidable task, and as the calculation, for the reason mentioned, would be strictly applicable only to the Church of England, it will probably be well to base the estimate on districts; thus assuming that the whole provision of a district is diffused throughout the district in an equal proportion to the population, and merely introducing the preceding observations to show that the above computed deficiency of sittings in the country, quite sufficiently alarming, is an under statement.

Particular illustrations of unequal distribution.

By a reference to the District Table (pp. cclxxvi-cxcxv of the Report), we obtain some curious illustrations of the widely varying condition of particular localities: some fortunately basking in excess of spiritual privileges, others absolutely "perishing for lack of knowledge." Probably a more instructive collocation cannot be produced than that presented by two neighbouring districts of the metropolis—the City of London, and Shoreditch. These stand respectively Nos. 19 and 20 in the topographical arrangement of the London districts; the former has accommodation for 81 per cent. of its inhabitants, the latter for 18; the former has a superfluity of 13,338 sittings*, the latter a deficiency of 43,755. Table (I.) in the SUMMARY TABLES gives a limited selection of the most conspicuous cases of abundance and of poverty: from which it will be seen how widely the proportions vary; Shoreditch having only 18 sittings to every 100 persons, while Machynlleth, in North Wales, has as many as 123 to every 100. It will be noticed, indeed, how favourably Wales in general is circumstanced—nearly all the districts having a considerable surplus of provision.

Comparative accommodation in Town and Country Districts.

As was to be expected, it is chiefly in the large and densely-peopled towns that a deficiency is felt; the rural districts are supplied in general with adequate, sometimes with superabundant, provision. It appears from Table 3. that the urban parts of England, containing an aggregate population of 8,294,240 persons, have accommodation for 3,814,215 or 46 per cent. of this number; while the rural parts, containing a population of 9,633,369 have provision for 6,398,348 or 66·5 per cent.

* An ingenious proposal has been made, with reference to the city churches, by the Rev. Charles Hume, Rector of St. Michael's, Wood Street. He suggests that, as the city has too many churches while the suburbs have too few, the very buildings themselves might be removed from the one place to the other. His scheme embraces a provision for the endowment of new districts for these churches in their new localities; the patronage remaining as at present.

These "urban districts" here, however, include small country towns, which seem to be as well supplied as any other portion of the country. If we take the large towns only (See Table 4.), and include small country towns with the rural parts to which they virtually belong, the proportion per cent. in urban districts will be 37 as compared with 73 in rural districts. And the proportion is in inverse ratio to the size of the towns; so that while in towns containing between 10,000 and 20,000 inhabitants, the proportion is 66; in towns containing between 20,000 and 50,000 it is 60; in those containing between 50,000 and 100,000 it is 47, and in those containing upwards of 100,000 it is 34. (See Table F.F., in the SUMMARY TABLES, post, p. cclxxxiii.) This view suggests with singular force the mixture of sentiments which led to the erection of the greater portion of our sacred edifices. Piety and local attachments—benevolence and longing for perpetual remembrance—principally, doubtless, a sincere desire to honour God, and yet, with this, a natural desire to raise a lasting monument to themselves,—these were the mingling motives to the influence of which may be attributed the existence of some thousands of our churches. Hence, it was in the very spot where the founder had his dwelling that his church was built: no other neighbourhood possessed such hold on his affections. Thus arose our village churches, and a multitude of structures in those ancient towns and cities where, in former times, the merchants were accustomed to reside. But our modern populous towns,—erected more for business than for residence—mere aggregates of offices and workshops and over-crowded dwellings of the subordinate agents of industry,—are inhabited by none whose means permit them to reside elsewhere. The wealthy representatives of those whose piety supplied our ancient towns with churches fly from the unwholesome atmosphere of our new cities, and dispense their charity in those suburban or more rural parishes in which their real homes are situated and their local sympathies are centred. The innumerable multitudes who do and must reside within the compass of the enormous hives in which their toil is daily carried on, are thus the objects of but little of that lively interest with which benevolent men regard the inhabitants of their immediate neighbourhood, and which produces, in our small-sized country parishes, so many institutions for their physical and moral benefit. The masses, therefore, of our large and growing towns—connected by no sympathetic tie with those by fortune placed above them—form a world apart, a nation by themselves; divided almost as effectually from the rest as if they spoke another language or inhabited another land. What Dr. Chalmers calls "the influence of locality," is powerless here: the area is too extensive and the multitude too vast. It is to be hoped that the influence of trade-connexion may ere long sufficiently accomplish what the influence of locality is now too feeble to secure; that heads of great industrial establishments, the growth of recent generations, may perform towards the myriads connected with them by community of occupation, those religious charities or duties which the principal proprietors in rural parishes perform towards those connected with them by vicinity of residence. Much, doubtless, has already been effected in this way;* but the need for more is manifest and urgent. The following Table (4.) shows the present accommodation in seventy-two large towns or boroughs, and the additional amount required, if 58 per cent. of the population ought to have within their reach the means of public worship. It will here be interesting to compare the ancient towns with those which have been called into existence or activity by modern enterprise and industry.

* See an interesting account of the various measures—including the provision of a church and chaplain—adopted for the benefit of their workpeople, by Price's Patent Candle Company.—Report to the Shareholders, 1852. Mr. Peto, I believe, supplies the numerous labourers engaged in executing his extensive contracts, with a library and means of religious worship and instruction. Doubtless many other cases might be mentioned of a warm regard displayed by masters for the moral welfare of their men.

* The Municipal limits of the Towns here mentioned have been generally taken: an asterisk (*) indicates the exceptions—where the Parliamentary boundaries have been followed. Estimates have been made of the number of sittings in these places of worship the Returns for which omit to give this information. For other particulars relating to these towns, see post, SUMMARY TABLES, pp. cclii-cclxxii.

† This is the Municipal and Parliamentary City of London; comprising the three Poor Law Unions of East London, West London, and City of London (within the walls). The latter Union corresponds with the ancient City of London, and contains accommodation for 81 per cent. of the inhabitants, or for 13,338 more than could at any one time attend.

‡ This proportion of sittings to population for the Metropolis is calculated upon the number which remains after deducting 13,338 sittings, a surplus existing in the City of London (within the Walls) over and above the number requisite for 58 per cent. of the population of the district.

§ In dealing with London in this total, the entire Metropolis has been taken: the figures therefore which relate to the Boroughs of Finsbury, Greenwich, Lambeth, London City, Marylebone, Southwark, Tower Hamlets, and Westminster have not been noticed in the addition; being included in the numbers which represent the Metropolis.

This Table clearly shows how great and overwhelming a proportion of the whole deficiency of England is assignable to our great modern towns, since thus it seems that out of the total number of 1,644,734 additional sittings reckoned to be necessary, 1,332,992 or 80 per cent. are required for these seventy-two boroughs, or rather for sixty of the most recent, the remainder, for reasons obvious when their names are seen, being fortunately blessed with more than adequate provision. This gives a vivid picture of the destitute condition of our great-town population, and speaks loudly of the need there is for new and energetic plans of operation having special reference to towns. The absence of that local interest which leads to individual benevolence, and the evident inadequacy of all that can be reasonably expected from the great employers of industry, appear to call for the combined exertions either of the whole inhabitants of a particular neighbourhood, or of the Christian Church at large, as the only other method for relieving such deplorable deficiency. And this has been to some extent perceived and acted on. With reference to the Church of England, many churches have been raised by the united liberality of the inhabitants of populous town parishes, encouraged by assistance from the funds of central bodies, such as the Incorporated Church Building Society; and amongst the Dissenters many chapels have been reared in similar manner. But it cannot, it is feared, be said that these mere local efforts promise to diminish very sensibly the grievous lack of accommodation for the masses of our civic population. Hitherto the action of those central bodies which dispense the bounties of the general Christian public has been made dependent on the previous action of the local bodies in whose midst the additional church or chapel is to be erected; and unfortunately it but rarely happens that such local action is aroused, except to obtain accommodation for an increase of the middle classes, who already appreciate religious ordinances and are able and disposed to bear the pecuniary burden requisite in order to obtain them. The effect has been that the considerable addition made in recent years to the religious edifices of large towns has been in very near proportion to the rapid growth, in the same interval, of the prosperous middle classes; but the far more rapid increase in this period in the number of artizans and labourers has taken place without a corresponding increase of religious means for them. The only prominent example, within my knowledge, of a vigorous effort to relieve a local want without waiting for local demand, is the movement which, some years ago, the Bishop of London originated and successfully, beyond anticipation, prosecuted, for providing fifty new churches for the metropolitan parishes. And yet it really seems that, without some missionary enterprises similar to this, the mighty task of even mitigating spiritual destitution in our towns and cities hardly can be overcome.*

A most important question is, the rate at which, with our existing modes of operation, fresh accommodation is provided, as compared with the continual increase in the numbers of the people. To display this accurately we require correct accounts of the provision in existence at particular former periods. No authentic records are available, however, of the state of each religious body in preceding years. The nearest estimate that can be made is furnished by the information which the present returns afford with reference to the dates at which existing edifices were erected, or appropriated to religious uses; but, for several increasing.

* I am not aware of any special agencies, connected with the various Dissenting bodies, which attain the objects here described. The necessarily self-supporting character of all the institutions founded by Dissenters renders it, in their case, almost indispensable to make the erection of a chapel dependent on the prospect of an adequate pecuniary return. Hence, though the Congregational and Baptist bodies have established recently their "Chapel Building Societies," the operation of these central boards is practically limited, if not by an actual local demand, yet by the prospect of a speedy local sympathy among the middle classes.

reasons, the conclusions to be drawn from this source must be subject to a certain degree of hazard. In the first place, as the facts relate entirely to existing buildings, there is no account of those which may have been in use in former times and since abandoned. In the second place, in consequence of an oversight in the framing of the question, several places (parts of buildings), erected in former years, but only latterly employed for religious services, have been returned with the earlier date. And thirdly, with respect to as many as 4,546, out of the 34,467, no date whatever is inserted in the returns. Fortunately, for the purpose of an approximate inference, the errors arising from these three sources do not all tend in the same direction, so that there is some probability that an error in the one direction may be counteracted by an error in the other. Thus the influence of the first of these inaccuracies is to make the earlier periods seem to have less than their correct accommodation; while the influence of the second error is, upon the contrary, to attribute to the earlier periods a greater, and to the recent periods a less, amount of accommodation than is really due to them. Of the 4,546 buildings without dates assigned, 2,118 belong to the Church of England, and of these the greater portion probably were built in the earlier periods; while, on the other hand, the larger number of the 2,428 which belong to the Dissenting bodies were erected probably in recent years. Perhaps the best course therefore to pursue, in order to present a tolerably accurate statement of these dates, will be to distribute the 4,546 places of worship over the six intervals, according to the proportion which the number actually assigned to each of these intervals bears towards the total number having dates assigned at all. If this be done, and if the average numbers, as now ascertained, of sittings to a place of worship (viz. 377 for places belonging to the Church of England, and 240 for those belonging to Dissenters), be supposed to have been the average number at each former interval *, we obtain the results which appear in Table 5.

* It will not do to apply the general average (296); as the relative position of the different bodies was not the same in the early portion of the century as now; the Church of England having in 1801 (according to the estimate from dates) as many as 11,379 churches, whereas the Dissenters then (according to same estimate) had only 3701. This, however, is scarcely probable, and seems to prove that many Dissenters' buildings, existing in former years, have since become disused or have been replaced by others. As so much depends upon the extent to which this disuse and substitution have prevailed, these calculations, in the absence of any facts upon those points, must necessarily be open to some doubts.

From this it appears that, taken in the gross, our rate of progress during the last thirty years has not been altogether unsatisfactory. Previous to 1821, the population increased faster than accommodation for religious worship, so that while, from 1801 to 1821, the former had increased from 8,892,536 persons to 12,000,236 (or 34·9 per cent.), the latter, during the same interval, had only increased from 5,171,123 sittings to 6,094,486 (or 17·8 per cent.), and the proportion of sittings to population, which in 1801 was 58·1 per cent., had declined in 1821 to less than 51 per cent. But from 1821 to the present time the course of things has changed: the rate of increase of the population has continually declined, while that of religious accommodation has steadily advanced; so that while the number of the people has been raised from 12,000,236 to 17,927,609 (an increase of 49·4 per cent.), the number of sittings has been raised from 6,094,486 to 10,212,563 (or an increase of 67·6 per cent.), and the proportion of sittings to population, which in 1821 was 50·8 per cent., had risen in 1851 to 57 per cent.

As far then as regards the increase of accommodation in the aggregate, there seems to be some cause for gratulation; but in the matter of our rate of increase as well as in that of our actual existing supply, the question of distribution is important; and we want to know how far the progress thus manifested in the gross, is taking place in those parts of the country shown to be behind the rest. It is therefore necessary to inquire to what extent the great towns have participated in this augmentation, and the following Table (6.), constructed in the same way as the last, will show the respective rates at which the population and religious provision are increasing in the registration districts which contain large towns, and, compared with this, the same information as to all the rest of England:—

It hence appears that the Towns have by no means had a share proportionate to their need, in the liberality which, during the last half century, has added 19,387 places of worship and 5,041,440 sittings to the accommodation existing in 1801. For although the increase of provision in towns has been 174 per cent. in the 50 years, while the increase in the country parts has not exceeded 66 per cent.; yet such has been the more rapid increase of population in the former than in the latter (156 per cent. against 65 per cent.) that the accommodation in towns in proportion to the population is scarcely less deficient than it was in 1801—viz. 45 sittings to every 100 persons instead of 42; while the accommodation for the rest of England will still suffice for as many as 70 out of every 100 of the rural population.

Extent to which the accommodation is actually available.

The result of the previous course of observation, as to the amount of present accommodation, seems to be this: Assuming that all religious sects, whatever their variety, are to have their share in ministering to the people; and applying to the absolute total number of sittings a correction for unequal distribution; the existing provision furnished by the entire religious community is adequate to supply the spiritual wants of 8,753,279 persons, or 48·8 per cent. of the whole; i.e., there are places of worship within the reach of that number, and capable of holding them. It is obvious, however, that a church or chapel may be within the reach of a neighbourhood, as far as proximity is concerned, and yet not available for the use of those by leisure able to frequent it: it might not be open. The practical value therefore of these 8,753,279 sittings, computed to be within the reach of that same number of persons, is dependent on the extent to which they are offered for the occupation of the public. Now, many places of worship are opened only once upon the Sunday: and where this is the case, although there might be sittings in them equal to 58 per cent. of the population, this supply would practically be inadequate; for it is only on the supposition that persons necessarily detained at home at one period of the day are enabled, by the system of relief, to worship in another period of the day—it is only upon this supposition that a proportion of sittings to population of 58 per cent. can be considered adequate; for it must be recollected that 58 per cent. is not an estimate of the total number of persons able to worship at all upon the Sunday, but of the total number able to worship at one time on the Sunday. The aggregate number of people who might worship on the Sunday—some at one period, and some at another—is probably as great as 70 per cent. of the entire community. If, therefore (to suppose a case), in any district, all the churches should have only a single service in the day, the accommodation in that district would be, practically, less by some 12 or 15 per cent. than in another district where the actual number of sittings might be just the same, but where in all the churches two services a day were held. We must, therefore, before assuming that the state of things would be satisfactory if a certain number of sittings (58 per cent.) were furnished, ask to what extent they would, when furnished, be available. The following Table (7.) will afford a view of the extent to which the present accommodation is made use of:—

TABLE 7.

* Including an estimate for Returns which omitted to mention the number of sittings.

So that, while the actual number of sittings is 10,212,563, there is never at any one time that number available to the public. In the morning, 1,714,043 of them, in the afternoon 3,944,635, in the evening 4,489,563, are withdrawn from public use.

But here no allowance has been made for the effects of unequal distribution, and unless we can assume that all the places closed were situate in districts where there was a surplus of accommodation, equalling exactly the number of their sittings, there must be a slight deduction made from the numbers given in this table, ere we can arrive at a correct account of the available provision of the country; i.e., sittings both open for worship and within reach of parties able to make use of them. This deduction will take place wherever the number of available sittings in a district exceeds 58 per cent. of the population, and the amount of such deduction will precisely correspond with such excess. The result is, to reduce the number of sittings available for morning service to 8,322,066; the number available for afternoon service to 6,192,061; and the number available for evening service to 5,712,670.

Of course, the number of services per diem is mainly affected by the situation of the place of worship, whether it be in town or country. The effect of this is seen in Table 8.; from which it appears that the 34,467 places of worship were made available for the holding of 63,095 services; being an average of not quite two services to each place of worship. In the towns, more use was made of the accommodation than in the country: every 100 places in the former being used for 208 services, while 100 places in the latter were not used for more than 175 services.

An important question meets us now: how much of the accommodation proved to be existing is available for the use of that great part of the community most needing spiritual education, and least able, by pecuniary outlay, to procure it? What proportion of our present provision is at the service of the poorer classes, without price? For the purpose of ascertaining this, inquiry was made, as to every place of worship, how many of the sittings were "free;" the meaning of the term being "free to any persons wishing, without payment, to occupy them." The answers to this question were, unfortunately, not in every instance framed in accordance with this interpretation. In the case of ancient parish churches, sometimes all the sittings were returned as free—the meaning evidently

What proportion of the accommodation is free?

* The "Town Portion" here given comprehends every place which, either from possessing a market or from some other cause, is entitled to be called a "Town."

being that no money payment was received from the occupants; but, as many of them were, no doubt, appropriated, either by custom or the authority of church officers, to particular persons, it is clear they would not be available indiscriminately to the poor, so as to make them “free sittings” in the sense above referred to. And with reference to Dissenters’ chapels, it seems not unlikely that the term “free sittings” has been taken as including sittings merely unlet, and not confined to sittings specially and permanently set apart for the use of the poorer classes. In the case of the Church of England, a correction (as explained in the Appendix) was made for the erroneous construction of the question; so that the number of sittings now assigned to that community as “free,” will probably express with tolerable accuracy the accommodation provided by the Church of England expressly for the poor; but, no materials existing for a similar correction in the case of Nonconformist chapels, the statement of free sittings given in the Tables as provided in such chapels will be subject to this drawback. So that, probably, the view presented in these Tables of the means of worship specially provided for the poor is somewhat too favourable. However, taking it subject to this reservation, the result of the information is as follows: out of the total of 10,212,563 sittings, 8,390,464 were distinguished into the two classes of “free” and “appropriated,” while the remaining 1,822,099 were not distinguished at all. Of the 8,390,464 which were distinguished, 3,947,371 were described as free, and 4,443,093 were described as appropriated. If, therefore, we assume that the undescribed 1,822,099 were apportioned between the two classes in the same degree as were the 8,390,464 which were properly described, the estimated statement as to all the sittings will be thus:—

Free sittings	-	-	-	-	4,804,595
Appropriated sittings	-	-	-	-	5,407,968

Total	-	-	-	-	10,212,563
-------	---	---	---	---	------------

But here again, of course, the element of distribution is important in determining how far these 4,804,595 free sittings are available to those requiring them. The previous observations as to distribution, in connexion with the total number of sittings, seem to show that out of an apparent supply of 10,212,563, only 8,753,279 are in fact available, as being within reach of those who might use them. If, therefore, we assume that the proportion of “free” to “other” sittings is the same in one part of the country as another, it will follow that, from unequal distribution, 686,535 of the 4,804,595 free sittings will be unavailable, as being beyond the reach of those requiring them; thus leaving only 4,118,060 practically useful. Table 9., however, will convey some information of the comparative provision of free sittings in the town and rural portions of the land respectively:—

Provision made by each Religious Body.

Hitherto the question of accommodation has been treated as if all the various churches were to be accepted as appropriate contributors towards the spiritual teaching of the people. Such a view, however, can be evidently satisfactory to none; for while, with reference to some communities, a concord on essential points prevails to such extent that neither of them would depreciate the labours of the rest, yet certainly the differences between some bodies are so fundamental that the widest charity could not look favourably on all, nor help regarding the provision furnished by a certain few as utterly to be ignored in any estimate of the religious destitution of the country. But, of course, it is not here that any judgment can be given on such delicate and dubious questions. Every reader must for himself select the churches whose exertions he may think commendable and those whose efforts he may fear to be upon the whole injurious. The proper aim of this Report is merely to supply to every reader the facilities for making such selection, and for ascertaining what is the amount of accommodation afforded by each individual sect, and what the rate at which each sect, if active, is advancing.

Apportionment of accommodation amongst the various Churches.

The precise amount of the provision made by each Religious Body will be seen in Table 10.; in considering which it must, of course be recollected that a striking difference prevails between the kind of accommodation provided by the Church of England and that provided by many of the Dissenting bodies; the former almost always consisting of substantial fabrics and commodious pews or seats, while much of the latter is composed of rooms in dwelling houses, with temporary seats or benches. Thus, only 223 out of 14,077 places of worship in connexion with the Church of England were "not separate buildings;" while the number under this head out of 20,390 places of worship in connexion with Dissenting churches was as many as 3,285; and probably this number is below the fact, since the published statistics issued by these various communities make mention of a greater number. Not that this diminishes the value of such provision as affording opportunities of spiritual instruction: rather, perhaps, the character of this accommodation has a special fitness for the classes who avail themselves of it; but it is a fact that must be borne in mind when considering in other aspects the comparative accommodation furnished by the different churches.

This Table (10.) then, shows the aggregate provision made by every individual sect; and what proportion the provision made by each sect bears towards the total accommodation (58 per cent.) conceived to be essential. So that, if it be thought desirable that any particular church (the Church of England, for example,) should provide for the religious teaching of the whole community, this table will afford a view of the extent to which the provision made falls short of that which would on such a supposition be required: and so of other churches.

But, of course, the questions just discussed with reference to all the sects unitedly are equally important with respect to each sect individually: the question of distribution must be answered ere the true amount of accommodation can be settled; and a reference to dates, to special localities, to the frequency of services, and to the number of free sittings, must be made before we can determine, with regard to every church, its rate of progress, its peculiar strongholds, its available provision, and its conduct towards the poor. The necessary limits of this Report will not, however, suffer me to notice in this manner more than two or three great bodies.

First, the CHURCH OF ENGLAND. We have seen already that the National Church provides, in the gross, accommodation for 5,317,915 persons out of the 10,398,013 able to attend at one time a religious service. But, upon the theory of distribution, as explained before, 21,673 of these sittings are superfluous, being situate in districts where there is accommodation in connexion with the Established Church for a greater number than 58 per cent. of the district population*; so that, practically, the accessible provision made by the Established Church is enough for only 5,296,242 persons, or but 29·5 per cent. of the inhabitants of England and Wales. To enable the Church of England to provide for all the population, an additional accommodation to the extent of 5,101,771 sittings would be requisite, nearly doubling the present supply; but, probably, considering the hold which several other churches, not extremely differing from the Church of England, have upon the affections of the people, few will advocate the present necessity of so extensive an addition. There exist, however, if the previous course of argument be accurate, as many as 1,644,734 persons wholly unprovided, by the agency of any church whatever, with the means of religious worship; and to this extent, at all events, there is an urgent claim upon the Church of England for augmented effort. Without doubt, the destitute condition of this vast proportion of our countrymen appeals to the benevolence of Christians indiscriminately; but the claim for sympathy and succour is preferred with special force upon the Church of England, to whose care the spiritual welfare of these myriads is peculiarly entrusted, and whose labours for their benefit need not be limited by any courteous fear of trespassing on ground already occupied by other Christian agents. Not that this number constitutes the only class for whom the Church should furnish additional accommodation; doubtless, the ill-taught and the wrongly-taught demand her aid as well as the un-taught, but the utterly neglected evidently claim her first exertions; not to mention that they form a class which is much more easily defined than are the other two.

Accommodation provided by the Church of England.

Confining our attention, therefore, to the wholly uninstructed multitude in whom the Church of England has an incontestible possession, the inquiry is suggested—Where, principally, are these claimants on her ministrations to be found? To what localities must her attention chiefly be directed, and her measures of relief applied? The previous tables have prepared us to expect that towns, especially large towns, will prove to be the scenes of most of that deplorable privation of religious means, the formidable aggregate of which has just been mentioned; and the following Table (11.) will show that this anticipation is abundantly correct.

* These districts, where the Established Church alone provides room for more than could at any one time be present, are—Alresford; Beaminster; Billesdon; Bosmere; Brackley; Bridge; Bridgnorth; Brixworth; Catherington; Docking; Dorchester; Erpingham; Market Harborough; Marlborough; Melton Mowbray; Meriden; Oakham; Pershore; Romney Marsh; Sanford; Skirlaugh; Steyning; Tetbury; Thakcham; Thingoe; Tisbury; Tunstead; West-hampnett; and Winchcomb.

* The Large Town Districts referred to in this Table are the Districts which contain Towns having more than 10,000 inhabitants: the Country Districts are the remainder of England and Wales.

† Including an estimate for defective Returns.

‡ The districts are arranged according to their destitution as compared with the population, commencing with the most destitute.

The entire list of districts in which additional accommodation is needed will be found in the SUMMARY TABLES.

This much as to the position of the Church of England in relation to our wholly unaccommodated population. It will now be interesting to observe the position of the Church, in different portions of the country, in relation to the other churches. In Table K., (SUMMARY TABLES, post, p. 139) is given a comparative view of the provision furnished by the Church and by Dissenting Bodies in each county of England and Wales; from which it will be seen what portions of the country are peculiar strongholds of any particular body. Dissenters most abundant in Wales, Monmouthshire, Yorkshire, Cornwall, Cheshire, Lancashire, Derbyshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, and Bedfordshire; in all which counties their sittings exceed in number those provided by the Church of England, while in Wales and Monmouthshire they are more than double. In all the other counties the Establishment has a preponderance,—most conspicuous in Herefordshire, Sussex, and Oxfordshire, where the sittings of the Church are more than double those of the Dissenters. The two parties are very nearly balanced in Lincolnshire, Staffordshire, Leicestershire, Cumberland, and Cambridgeshire. On the whole of England and Wales, for every 100 sittings provided by the Church of England, Dissenters furnish 93.

Position of the Church of England in relation to other bodies.

The rate at which the Church of England is advancing in the path of self-extension, so far as this question can be settled by a reference to the dates at which existing churches were erected, is displayed in Table 13, the method of constructing which has been explained before (p. 65, where also will be found some other explanations applicable to this Table). It is probable that an inference as to the position of affairs in former times can be drawn from the dates of existing buildings with more correctness in the case of the Church of England, as the edifices are more permanent and less likely to change hands than are the buildings used by the Dissenters. Still there is a possibility that too great an amount of accommodation has been ascribed to the earlier periods. Subject to a certain degree of qualification from this cause, the Table shows that in the last half century the Church of England has increased her provision by 24 per cent.; but the rapid growth of population in the same time (101·6 per cent.) has materially altered her position as compared with the whole community; for, whereas, in 1801, she supplied accommodation for very nearly half the people (48·2 per cent.), she now contributes less than a third (29·6 per cent.). The increase between 1841 and 1851, however, is very striking, being no less than 11·3 per cent., and nearly equal to the whole increase of population in that interval (12·6 per cent.).

General rate of progress during the half century.

1851 -	17,927,609	14,077	5,317,915	12·6	11·3	29·7

* This number approaches very near to that returned in the Population Abstract of 1831 (viz. 11,825); and, considering that the latter number referred exclusively to separate consecrated buildings, while the number given above includes an estimate for licensed rooms, &c., it seems probable that these estimates are not far from the truth.

The rate of progress in large town districts, where the additional accommodation is so much required, will be shown in Table 14; which, if accurate, displays in a striking manner the continually increasing activity of the Church in recent times.

Number of services.

Pursuing still with respect to the Church of England the inquiries made already with respect to all the churches in the aggregate, the next point is—How much of the accommodation shown to have been belonging to the Church of England on the Census Sunday (viz. 14,077 churches and 5,317,915 sittings) was available to the public on that day? or, in other words, how many of the buildings were open for worship at each period of the day? The answer is, that, out of 14,077 buildings, 11,794 were open for service in the morning; 9,933 in the afternoon; and 2,439 in the evening. The number of sittings thus available was—Morning, 4,852,645; afternoon, 3,761,812; evening, 1,739,275. The much larger proportion of sittings to churches in the evening than in the other periods of the day is itself sufficient to suggest that the evening services must have been held in the towns, where the edifices are much larger than are those in rural districts; but the following Table (15.) shews at once the frequency with which services were held, and the influence of locality in aiding or diminishing this frequency.

* The "Town Portion" referred to in this Table includes all Towns without regard to size.

This presents a singular contrast with the usage in regard to Protestant Dissenters' services, which are generally held in the later portion, rather than the earlier, of the day. This will be seen more clearly in Table 16.

TABLE 16.

The effect of this upon the available number of sittings at each portion of the day is, that while the available accommodation provided by the Church of England was highest in the morning, lower in the afternoon, and lowest in the evening, that provided by Dissenters was highest in the evening, lower in the morning, and lowest in the afternoon; as will be seen by reference to the following figures:

				Sittings available in connexion with
				Church of England.	Other Protestant English Churches.	Total Protestant English Churches.
Morning	-	-	-	4,852,645	3,428,665	8,281,310

Evening	-	-	-	1,739,275	3,855,394	5,594,669

The way to show how much (to use a familiar expression) is got out of their buildings by the Church of England and by Dissenters, comparatively, is to take an average 1,000 of the sittings belonging to each, and ascertain how many of them were available at each period of the day. The result is this:

Use made of their buildings by Churchmen and Dissenters comparatively.

				Sittings available (out of an average 1,000) in connexion with

Afternoon	-	-	-	708	508	614
Evening	-	-	-	327	827	561
TOTAL	-	-	-	649	690	668

So that on the whole the Dissenters make rather more of their accommodation than does the Established Church; for while the latter, in the morning and afternoon, makes use of its buildings to a greater extent than do the former (most of the Dissenting chapels being used in the afternoon for Sunday School instruction), yet the very limited extent to which the churches are thrown open for worship in the evening, when the chapels of Dissenters are most occupied, gives to Dissenters an enormous superiority for that part of the day, and even makes their total accommodation (adding the three columns together) exceed by a little the total available accommodation provided by the Church of England. That is, proportionally to the total accommodation belonging to each; for, absolutely, the Church of England had, in all three portions of the day, 10,353,732 sittings available against 9,651,438 belonging to Protestant Dissenters.

Summary view of the position occupied by the Church of England.

The general result as regards the accommodation furnished by the Church of England is that in 14,077 buildings there are 5,317,915 sittings, equal to 29·6 per cent. of the population; that, of these, 21,673 are 'practically superfluous as being out of the reach of any persons who could fill them; that the residue (5,296,242) is equal to the wants of only 29·5 per cent. of the population; and that, in consequence of a number of places not being open, there are only 4,852,645 sittings available for morning, 3,761,812 for afternoon, and 1,739,275 for evening service.—Of the total number of 5,317,915 sittings, 1,803,773 were described as "free"; and 2,123,395 as "appropriated"; 1,390,747 being altogether undescribed.—The inference to be drawn from the information as to the periods at which existing churches were erected shows a rate of progress not unsatisfactory altogether, but inadequate in towns.

Chief Protestant
Dissenting Bodies.

The most numerous religious bodies, next to the Established Church, are the Wesleyan Methodists, the Independents or Congregationalists, and the Baptists. The first and the last of these denominations are respectively dispersed into several sections; but the Independents form a compact and undivided body. If we consider the Wesleyans and the Baptists in their aggregate combined capacity, the three denominations will contribute each as follows towards the general religious accommodation of the country:

	Places of Worship.	Sittings.
Wesleyan Methodists - -	11,007	2,194,298
Independents - - -	3,244	1,067,760
Baptists - - -	2,789	752,343

Many of these places of worship are, however, merely parts of buildings, rooms in houses used as mission stations in poor neighbourhoods unable to support a regular chapel. The number mentioned in the returns as "not separate buildings" is.—Wesleyan Methodists, 2,155; Independents, 284; and Baptists, 304; but there seems to be some reason for conjecturing that these are under-statements, that the number of "separate and entire" religious edifices has been somewhat exaggerated, and the number of rooms, &c. correspondingly reduced.* The WESLEYAN METHODISTS are found in greatest

* Mr. E. Baines, in his evidence before the Select Committee on Church Rates, gave an estimate of the chapels belonging to these bodies as follows:—

	Chapels.	Preaching Stations.	Total.
Wesleyan Methodists - - -	7130	4979	12,109
Independents - - -	2572	1000	3572
Baptists - - -	1943	1384	3327

force in Cornwall, Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, Derbyshire, Durham, and Nottinghamshire; their fewest numbers are in Middlesex, Surrey, Sussex, Essex, Warwickshire, and Hertfordshire. The INDEPENDENTS flourish most in South Wales, North Wales, Essex, Dorsetshire, Monmouthshire, and Suffolk; least in Northumberland, Durham, Herefordshire, and Worcestershire. The BAPTISTS are strongest in Monmouthshire, South Wales, Huntingdonshire, Bedfordshire, Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, and Buckinghamshire; weakest in Cumberland, Northumberland, Westmorland, Cornwall, Staffordshire, and Lancashire.

The following statement, derived from the column of dates, will show, as far as can be gathered from that source, the rate at which each body has progressed in the present century. But great reliance cannot safely be reposed in inferences from dates in the case of dissenting places of worship, since a certain number (merely rooms) have undoubtedly, though only occupied in recent years for religious purposes, been returned with the date of their erection—not that of their first appropriation to such uses.* So, too, of chapels which have passed from one denomination to another: the date supplied has frequently been that of the original construction of the edifice. The effect, as explained already, is to throw upon the earlier years a number of chapels which should properly be reckoned as the offspring of our own day. The chance, of possible accuracy is the probability that several places used in former times have since been discontinued. This would act as a counterpoise in some sort to the former error. Subject to whatever reservation may be thought essential, Table 17. will display the progress of these three bodies since 1801.

Increase of the Bodies during the Half Century.

From this it appears that neither of these bodies is advancing at a rate so rapid as formerly. But then it must also be remembered, that neither is there room for such a rapid increase, since the aggregate rate of increase during the half century has been so much more rapid than the increase of the population that whereas, in 1801, the number of sittings provided for every 1,000 persons was—by Wesleyans 18, by Independents 34, and by Baptists 20; in 1851, the provision was—by Wesleyans 123, by Independents 59, and by Baptists 42.

* Instances of this may be seen in the case of the Wesleyan Reformers: 111 of their places of worship being returned as erected prior to 1841, although the movement out of which the partly originated did not commence till 1849. So, the Primitive Methodists, who did not appear till after 1810, have returned 228 of the chapels before that period; the Bible Christians, who arose in 1815, return 27 chapels as erected before 1811; and the Wesleyan Methodist Association (which was formed in 1836) reports 86 chapels as existing prior to 1831. In the Table (17.) a correction has been made for these conspicuous errors; and the chapels have been distributed over the period subsequent to the formation of these sects.

Comparative position of these Bodies in the town and country districts.

We have seen how far the Christian churches generally and the Church of England in particular provide for the religious teaching of the masses in large towns. A similar view of the achievements of the three important bodies named above is presented in Table (18).

Available Accommodation.

With respect to the use which these three bodies made of the accommodation they possessed, it will be found, that out of a total number of 11,007 places of worship belonging to the various sections of Wesleyan Methodists, only 4,990 were open for morning worship, 6,796 in the afternoon, and 8,930 in the evening. The Independents, out of a total of 3,244 places of worship, opened 2,261 in the morning, 1,406 in the afternoon, and 2,539 in the evening. The Baptists, out of 2,789 places of worship, had morning service in 2,055, afternoon service in 1,550, and evening service in 2,127. A general view of the extent to which these bodies severally use their chapels will be seen in the following Table (19).

This, however, must be taken, subject to the possibility already hinted, that under the term of free sittings may be included sittings merely unlet.

Next to these three denominations of Dissenters † come, in the order of magnitude, the Calvinistic Methodists, divided into two classes, the Welsh and the English—the latter being known as the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. Together they supply 250,678 sittings, mostly in Wales. The remaining Protestant sects thus range themselves :

And then a great crowd of what are called, for want of a better term, “Isolated Congregations,” refusing to acknowledge connexion with any particular sect, make up together as many as 539 places of worship with 104,481 sittings.

In the aggregate, the Protestant Dissenting churches of England provide accommodation for 4,657,422 persons, or for 26 per cent. of the population, and 45·6 per cent. of the aggregate provision of the country. The proportion of this accommodation which is available at each period of the day is—morning, 3,428,665 sittings; ; afternoon, 2,367,379 sittings; evening, 3,855,394 sittings; making a total, at all three portions of the day, of 9,651,438 sittings.

Aggregate provision made by Protestant Dissenting Churches.

Of the Christian churches not Protestant, the most important is the ROMAN CATHOLIC, which provides 570 places of worship, containing 186,111 sittings. This, however, represents a greater amount of accommodation than would the same number of sittings in a Protestant body, inasmuch as, by the custom of Roman Catholic worship, many persons stand. ‡ Out of these 186,111 sittings

OTHER CHRISTIAN CHURCHES: Roman Catholics.

* Of the total number of sittings belonging to these Bodies there were undistinguished as to this point—170,208 belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists; 86,032 belonging to the Independents; and 59,571 belonging to the Baptists. It has been assumed that the proportion of “Free” to “Appropriated” is the same amongst these undescribed sittings as amongst those actually distinguished.

† Some of the Wesleyan Methodists, however, though far from conforming with the Church of England, object to be called Dissenters from it.

The number of sittings described as free is 77,200; the number mentioned as appropriated is 73,210, and 35,701 are undistinguished.—The following Table shows in what parts of the country the Roman Catholics most and least abound.

Increase of the Roman Catholics during the half century.

The rate at which the Roman Catholics have increased in the last half century will best be seen by reference to the statistics for the period since 1824, given ante, page 44. instead of relying upon the doubtful indication supplied by the dates at which existing edifices were erected. From this source it appears that in 1824 there were 346 Roman Catholic chapels in England and Wales, while in 1853 the number had increased to 616. If we assume that the proportion of sittings to a chapel was the same (314) at each of these periods as in 1851, the number in 1824 would be 108,644, and the number in 1853 would be 193,424; the rate of increase in the 30 years being 87·2 per cent. During very nearly the same interval (viz. from 1821 to 1851) the sittings of all Protestant bodies, unitedly, increased from 5,985,842 to 9,982,533, the rate being 66·8 per cent. For every 1000 of the population, the Roman Catholics provided 8 sittings in 1824, and 10 sittings in 1853. The Protestants provided for every 1000 persons, 499 sittings in 1821, and 557 sittings in 1851. The proportion of sittings belonging to Roman Catholics to those belonging to Protestants was 1·8 to 100 at the former period, and 1·9 to 100 at the latter.

* Including an Estimate for defective Returns.

The only other prominent sect which appears to possess a noticeable degree of influence, is the "Church of the Latter Day Saints," known better by the name of Mormons. Within the short period since the introduction of this singular creed, as many as 222 chapels or stations have been established, with accommodation for 30,783 worshippers or hearers. The activity of the disciples of this faith is evidenced by the frequency with which they occupy these meeting-places: out of the total number of 222, as many as 147 (or 66 per cent.) were open in the morning, 187 (or 84 per cent.) were open in the afternoon, and 193 (or 87 per cent.) were open in the evening. Comparison with similar statistics of the other churches will show that this is much above the average frequency of services.

The summary result of this inquiry with respect to accommodation is, that there are in England and Wales 10,398,013 persons able to be present at one time in buildings for religious worship. Accommodation, therefore, for that number (equal to 58 per cent. of the population) is required. The actual accommodation in 34,467 churches, chapels, and out-stations is enough for 10,212,563 persons. But this number, after a deduction, on account of ill-proportioned distribution, is reduced to 8,753,279, a provision equal to the wants of only 49 per cent. of the community. And further, out of these 8,753,279 sittings, a certain considerable number are rendered unavailable by being in churches or chapels which are closed throughout some portion of the day when services are usually held. There is therefore wanted an additional supply of 1,644,734 sittings, if the population is to have an extent of accommodation which shall be undoubtedly sufficient.* These sittings, too, must be provided where they are wanted; i.e. in the large town districts of the country,—more especially in London. To furnish this accommodation would probably require the erection of about 2,000 churches and chapels; which, in towns, would be of larger than the average size. This is assuming that all churches and sects may contribute their proportion to the work, and that the contributions of each may be regarded as by just so much diminishing the efforts necessary to be made by other churches. If, as is probable, this supposition be considered not altogether admissible, there will be required a further addition to these 2,000 structures; the extent of which addition must depend upon the views which may be entertained respecting what particular sects should be entirely disregarded.

General result as to accommodation.

Of the total existing number of 10,212,563 sittings, the Church of England contributes 5,317,915, and the other churches, together, 4,894,648.

If we inquire what steps are being taken by the Christian church to satisfy this want, there is ample cause for hope in the history of the twenty years just terminated. In that interval the growth of population, which before had far

What is being done to supply existing wants?

* It may be said that this contemplates an optimistic condition of society; but it has been thought better to take as a standard the actual wants of the people, rather than their probable conduct. Readers can make their own deductions.

outstripped the expansion of religious institutions, has been less, considerably, than the increase of accommodation,—people having multiplied by 29 per cent., while sittings have increased by 46 per cent.; so that the number of sittings to 100 persons, which was only fifty in 1831, had risen to fifty-seven in 1851. And although this increase has not been confined to one particular church, it will scarcely less perhaps be matter for rejoicing; since, no doubt, the augmentation has occurred in bodies whose exertions cannot fail to have a beneficial influence, whatever the diversities of ecclesiastical polity by which, it may be thought, the value of these benefits in some degree is lessened. Doubtless, this encouraging display of modern zeal and liberality is only part of a continuous effort which—the Christian Church being now completely awakened to her duty—will not be relaxed till every portion of the land and every class of its inhabitants be furnished with at least the means and opportunities of worship. The field for future operations is distinctly marked: the towns, both from their present actual destitution and from their incessant and prodigious growth, demand almost a concentration of endeavours—the combined exertions of the general Church. Without an inclination for religious worship—certainly without ability to raise religious structures—the inhabitants of crowded districts of populous cities are as differently placed as possible from their suburban neighbours, who, more prosperous in physical condition, possess not only the desire to have, but also the ability to get, an adequate provision for religious culture. New churches, therefore, spring up naturally in those new neighbourhoods in which the middle classes congregate; but, all spontaneous efforts being hopeless in the denser districts peopled by the rank and file of industry no added churches, evidently, can be looked for there, except as the result of missionary labours acting from without. No agency appears more suited to accomplish such a work than that of those societies, possessed by most religious bodies, which collect into one general fund the offerings of the members of each body for church or chapel extension. The Established Church is represented in this way by the Incorporated Society, the Metropolitan Churches' Fund, and by several diocesan societies; the Independents, and the Baptists also, each possess their Building Funds; but the support which these societies receive must be enormously increased if any vigorous attempt is to be made to meet and conquer the emergency. Compared with the amount contributed for foreign missionary operations, the support received by organized societies for church and chapel extension here at home appears conspicuously inadequate*. The hope may probably be reasonably entertained, that while the contributions to the former work continue undiminished, the disparity between the treatment of the two may speedily disappear.

More frequent services.

Next only in importance to the question, how new churches are to be provided, is the question whether any increased advantage may be got from existing structures. When it is considered that there are probably as many as 25,000 edifices specially devoted to religious worship,—that the vast majority of these unfold their doors on one day only out of every seven,—that many even then are only opened for perhaps a couple of hours,—there seems to be a prodigality of means as compared with ends which forcibly suggests the idea of waste. Of course, in many cases this cannot be helped, and nothing more could be accomplished than is done; but where the population gathers thickly, as in towns and cities, it is thought that greater frequency of services would answer nearly the same purpose as a multiplication of churches. If, where two services are held, a third should be established, with the special understanding that the working class alone is expected to attend, and that the sittings upon that occasion are to be all free, it is considered that the buildings would be worthily employed, and that accommodation would be thus afforded to probably a third beyond the present ordinary number. So, too, upon week-days, it is thought that many opportunities are lost of attracting to religious services no inconsiderable number of those who rarely or never enter church or chapel on a Sunday. Week evening services, undoubtedly, are common now; but they are principally of a character adapted mainly to the regular attendants, and they generally terminate about the hour at which the workmen leave their labour. It appears that in the Church of England daily prayers are read in somewhat upwards of 600 churches in England and Wales.*

Amongst the Dissenters—who attribute no peculiar sanctity to buildings in which worship is conducted, nor regard a consecrated or other specially appropriated edifice as necessary for public service—an opinion has been gaining ground in favour of the plan of holding services in such of the public halls and rooms as are of general use for other purposes. To these, it is expected, working men will much more readily resort than to the formal chapel. The experiment has been repeatedly tried: it is reported with complete success.†

Religious services in secular buildings.

Whether, by these various means,—the erection of more churches—the increased employment of the present buildings—and the use of places not expressly dedicated to religious worship; whether by an increase of accommodation merely, without other measures, the reluctant people can be gained to practical Christianity, is what will be in some degree decided by inquiring, next, what number of attendants, on the Census-Sunday, used the accommodation actually then existing.

Would an increase of accommodation merely be sufficient?

* Masters's Guide to the Daily Prayers of England, Wales, and Scotland.

† Exeter Hall, during the period of the Exhibition, was engaged for this purpose, and was generally crowded with hearers. Recently (in February and March, 1853) a series of such services was held at Norwich, in St. Andrew's Hall, with similar results. Other instances are not uncommon.

2. ATTENDANCE.

Attendance at religious services a better test of religious disposition, than amount of accommodation.

Thus far, in considering the aspect of the English people towards religious institutions, our regard has been directed wholly to that proof of the existence or the absence of religious feeling, which is furnished by the ample or inadequate supply of the means of public worship. It is scarcely, however, with this evidence that one, desirous of obtaining a correct idea of the extent to which religious sentiments prevail among the masses of our population, would be satisfied. For, though the existence of a small provision only may be fairly taken as a proof of feeble spiritual life, since a people really governed by religious influences will not long remain without the means of outward worship; yet the converse of this proposition cannot be maintained, since much of the provision at the service of one generation may be owing to the piety of a former, whose religious zeal may not perhaps have been inherited by its posterity along with its rich legacy of churches. Even, too, a great contemporary addition to the number of religious edifices does not positively indicate the prevalence of a religious spirit in the body of the people: it may merely show the presence of a missionary spirit in a portion of the general Church. An inquirer, therefore, anxious to discover more precisely the extent to which religious sentiments pervade the nation, would desire to know not merely the amount of accommodation offered to the people, but also what proportion of the means at their command is actually used. A knowledge, therefore, of the number of ATTENDANTS on the various services of public worship is essential.

Number of attendants to be compared both with accommodation and population.

We have seen that, in the gross, there are 34,467 places of worship in England and Wales, with 10,212,563 sittings. But, as many of these places of worship were closed upon each portion of the day, and the sittings in them consequently unavailable, it is with the provision in the open buildings that we must compare the number of attendants. In those open for the morning service there were (including an estimate for defective returns) 8,498,520 sittings; in those open in the afternoon, 6,267,928 sittings; in those open in the evening, 5,723,000 sittings. The total number of attendants (also including estimates for omissions) was, in the morning, 4,647,482; in the afternoon, 3,184,135; in the evening, 3,064,449. From this it seems that, taking the three services together, less than half of the accommodation actually available is used. But here, again, the question of distribution is important. For if, in any locality, the amount of accommodation existing should be larger than that required, we cannot expect to find the number of attendants bearing there so large a proportion to the sittings as in other localities where the accommodation may be insufficient. There may really be a better attendance in a district where the churches are half empty than in one in which they are completely filled: that is, a greater number out of a given population may attend in the former case than in the latter. Therefore, before we can assume a lax attendance in particular districts, the number of the population must be brought into account. To prove a disregard of spiritual ordinances, there must be exhibited not merely a considerable number of vacant sittings, but also a corresponding number of persons by whom, if so disposed, those sittings might be occupied. But if, according to the previous computation, 58 per cent. of the population is the utmost that can ever be attending a religious service at one time, it is evident that where, as in some districts, the available accommodation is sufficient for a greater number, there must necessarily exist, whatever the devotional spirit of the people, an excess of sittings over worshippers. If, for example, we refer to the City of London (within the walls), which, with a population of 55,932, has sittings for as many as 45,779—or for 13,338 more than could possibly, at any one time, attend—it is obvious that a great many sittings must inevitably be unoccupied; and this without regard to the question whether, in fulfilling their religious duties, the inhabitants be zealous or remiss. The best plan, therefore, seems to be, to compare the attendants, in the first place, with the population; and then, secondly, with the sittings. The former view will give us an approximate idea of the extent to which religion has a practical influence over the community—exhibiting the numbers who appreciate or neglect religious services; the latter view will show in what degree neglect, if proved, may be occasioned or excused by the supply of insufficient means of worship. If, for instance, in a certain district, the proportion of the population found attending some religious service should be small, while at the same time there should be within the district ample room for the remainder: this would show conclusively that in that district a considerable number of the people were without religious habits, and indifferent to public worship. And the same conclusion might be drawn, although the actual provision were inadequate, if even this inadequate accommodation were but sparsely used.

Returning, then, to the total of England and Wales, and comparing the number of actual attendants with the number of persons able to attend, we find that out of 10,398,013 (58 per cent. of the total population) who would be at liberty to worship at one period of the day, there were actually worshipping but 4,647,482 in the morning, 3,184,135 in the afternoon, and 3,064,449 in the evening. So that, taking any one service of the day, there were actually attending public worship less than half the number who, as far as physical impediments prevented, might have been attending. In the morning there were absent, without physical hindrance, 5,750,531; in the afternoon, 7,213,878;* in the evening, 7,333,564. There exist no data for determining how many persons attended twice, and how many three times on the Sunday; nor, consequently, for deciding how many altogether attended on some service of the day; but if we suppose that half of those attending service in the afternoon had not been present in the morning, and that a third of those attending service in the evening had not been present at either of the previous services, we should obtain a total of 7,261,032 separate persons who attended service either once or oftener upon the Census-Sunday.† But as the number who would be able to attend at some time of the day is more than 58 per cent. (which is the estimated number able to be present at one and the same time)—probably reaching 70 per cent.—it is with this latter number (12,549,326) that this 7,261,032 must be compared, and the result of such comparison would lead to the conclusion

attendants.

* Many of these, no doubt, were teachers and scholars engaged in Sunday schools; which partake, indeed, of the character of religious services. The number of Sunday scholars on the Census-Sunday was about 2,250,000; and the number of teachers was about 302,000. Of these, a considerable proportion must have been engaged during the time for Afternoon service.

† The calculations in the latter part of this paragraph are mainly conjectural. The extent to which the congregations meeting at different portions of the day are composed of the same persons, can be ascertained only by a series of observations not yet made, so far as I am aware. We know, from the actual Returns, that the number could not be less than 4,647,482 (the number of attendants in the morning), nor more than 10,896,066 (the aggregate of all the services); and these are the limits within which must lie the number of attendants at some service. The mean of these extremes is 7,771,774, which is not considerably different from the result of the previous estimates. Opinions have been expressed that the number of individual attendants is about two thirds of the number of attendances. The latter number is, as above, 10,896,066; two-thirds of which are 7,264,044. Another supposition is, that, taking the number attending at the most frequented service in each church or chapel, the addition of one-third would give the number of persons probably attending the other services of the day but not that. From Table N. (post p. 142) we see that the former number (including Sunday Scholars attending service) is 6,356,222, which, increased by a third, amounts to 8,474,693. From this of course a considerable deduction must be made on account of those places of worship in which only one service was held; the number of such places being as many as 9,915. So that there appears to be some ground for thinking that the computation hazarded above is not far from the fact.—I believe that 70 per cent. of the total population may be taken as a fair estimate of the number able to worship at one period or another of the day.

that, upon the Census-Sunday, 5,288,294 persons, able to attend religious worship once at least, neglected altogether so to do.*

Is there sufficient
accommodation for the non-attendants?

This being then the number of persons failing to attend religious services, we now inquire how far this negligence may be ascribed to an inadequate accommodation. If there were not in all the various churches, chapels, and stations, room for more than those who actually attended, it is clear there would be no sufficient reason for imputing to the rest indifference to public ordinances: they might answer, they were quite inclined to worship, but were not provided with the means. Upon the other hand, if sittings, within reach of any given population, and available for their acceptance, were provided in sufficient number to accommodate (say) 58 per cent., it is no less manifest that absence in such case could only be attributed to non-appreciation of the service. In the latter case, however, the provision made must evidently be within the reach of the people and open to their use—accessible and available; for otherwise a portion of it might as well not be at all. As said before, a surplus of accommodation in one district cannot be regarded as supplying a deficiency in another. Therefore, before we can,—in order to compute the numbers who neglect religious worship, spite of opportunities for doing so,—compare attendance with accommodation, we must, when dealing with the whole of England in the gross, deduct from the total number of sittings, the number which in any district may exist above the number requisite for 58 per cent. of the district-population;—the excess beyond that number being, if the supposition is correct, entirely unavailing both to the dwellers in the district and to the inhabitants of other districts: to the former, since no more than 58 per cent. could possibly attend; to the latter, because out of reach. The number thus assumed to be superfluous is 1,459,284; and this deducted from the total number (10,212,563) leaves a residue of 8,753,279. This will be the number of sittings which, if all the churches and chapels were open, might be occupied at once each Sunday if the people within reach of them were willing; and whatever deficiency is shown by a comparison between this number and the total number of attendants may be safely asserted to consist of persons who, possessing the facilities, are destitute of the inclination to attend religious worship. The gross number of attendants being 4,647,482 in the morning, 3,184,135 in the afternoon, and 3,064,449 in the evening, it would follow, if the places of worship were all open, that 4,105,797 persons were, without excuse of inability, absent from the morning, 5,569,144 from the afternoon, and 5,688,830 from the evening service. But, as the churches and chapels are not all open every Sunday at each period of the day; 10,798 with 1,714,043 sittings being closed in the morning, 13,096 with 3,944,635 sittings being closed in the afternoon, and 16,412 with 4,489,563 sittings being closed in the evening; we are met by the question whether we should consider that the churches are closed because no congregations could be gathered, or that the people are absent because the churches are closed. If the former, the attendants may be properly compared with the total number of sittings in all places of worship (after making the deduction for unequal distribution) whether open or not; but, if the latter, the attendants cannot be compared with any but the number of sittings in the places of worship open at each period of the day. Perhaps as this is a question not to be decided here, the better course will be to make the comparison upon both hypotheses. The result will be observed in Table 21.

* It must not, however, be supposed that this 5,288,294 represents the number of habitual neglecters of religious services. This number is absent every Sunday; but it is not always composed of the same persons. Some may attend occasionally only; and if the number of such occasional attendants be considerable, there will always be a considerable number of absentees on any given Sunday. The number of habitual non-attendants cannot be precisely stated from these Tables.

This shows that if all who were absent from each service desired to attend that service, there would not be room for them on either supposition. On the first hypothesis (assuming that the buildings would all be open if the people wished to attend), there would be wanted 1,644,734 additional sittings; and the number of those who, in excuse for non-attendance, might plead absence of accommodation would be just that number; leaving, however, destitute of that excuse, 4,105,797 persons who neglected morning service, 5,569,144 who neglected afternoon service, and 5,688,830 who neglected evening service. On the second hypothesis (assuming that the churches closed are closed from necessary circumstances, and could not be opened even if it were desired), there would be wanted an additional supply of sittings to the extent of 2,575,947 in the morning, 4,205,952 in the afternoon, and 4,685,343 in the evening; and the number of persons who could plead the above excuse for non-attendance would be just as many. But this assumes that at every service 58 per cent. of the population would attend: a state of things which, however desirable, is scarcely likely to be realized. If we refer to the fourth and eighth columns of the Table, we shall see the computed number (7,261,032) who at the close of every Sunday can say that they have during the day attended a religious service; some thrice, some twice, but all at least once. As this would leave 5,288,294 altogether absent every Sunday, and as the aggregate of sittings is in the one case 26,259,837, and in the other 20,226,797, of which only 10,896,066 would be occupied; it is clear that, unless they should all select the same service, there is ample room for all the 70 per cent. who, according to the estimate, are able to attend at least once upon the Sunday. So that it is tolerably certain that the 5,288,294 who every Sunday, neglect religious ordinances, do so of their own free choice, and are not compelled to be absent on account of a deficiency of sittings.

* See ante, page 88.† See ante, page 87.‡ These numbers are not the aggregate of the three preceding columns; but the computed number of separate persons who either attended at some service on the Census-Sunday, or were altogether absent.

Nor will this conclusion be invalidated by a reference to the portion of accommodation which is free. We have seen that out of a total of 10,212,563 sittings, 4,804,595 are thus described; and the very fact that the others are, in greatest measure, paid for (and therefore likely to be used), appears to indicate that it is principally these “free” sittings that are thus unoccupied.

If therefore we were to measure the required additional supply of accommodation by the extent of the present demand for it, the use now made of our existing provision, as revealed by these few statements of attendance, would appear to indicate that very little more is wanted. The considerable number of available sittings which are every Sunday totally unoccupied, might be adduced as proof so manifest of unconcern for spiritual matters on the part of a great portion of the people, that, until they are impressed with more solicitude for their religious culture, it is useless to erect more churches. It will probably, however, be considered that, from various causes, many persons might attend new churches who would never attend the old; and that church and chapel extension is the surest means of acting on the neighbouring population—bringing into contact with it an additional supply of Christian agency, intent upon securing an increased observance of religious ordinances.

The frequency and regularity with which the people should attend religious services might naturally be expected to depend considerably upon locality. In rural, thinly-peopled districts, where the distances to be traversed are often long, with many impediments to locomotion, we should not anticipate so constant an attendance as in towns, where churches are within an easy walk of everybody's house. It seems, however, that facts will scarcely justify this supposition. The following Table (22.) will exhibit the comparative proportion of attendants in the thinly and the densely populated portions of the land:—

The comparative frequency with which the members of the various sects attended service will be found illustrated in Tables L. and M., among the Tabular Results (post, pp. 140, 141), from which it appears that while, in the aggregate, out of every 100 sittings, 45 are occupied in the morning, 31 in the afternoon, and 30 in the evening, considerable difference exists between the different bodies both as to the total number of their attendances, and as to the periods of the day at which they most attend. Thus, while the Table just presented shows that the Church of England has attending its three services more persons than all the other bodies put together, (3,773,474 against 3,487,558,) it appears from the Table on page 109, that the number of attendances given by the 3,773,474 persons is actually less than the number given by the 3,487,558; the former having attended 5,292,551 times, while the latter attended 5,603,515 times. Or, if we assume that a service, on an average, occupies an hour and three-quarters, it would seem that the 3,773,474 Churchmen devoted 9,261,962 hours to religious worship, (or two hours and a half each,) while the 3,487,558 Dissenters devoted 9,806,151 hours to a similar duty (or two hours and three-quarters each). If we come to particular bodies, we find from Table M. that, of those bodies whose size is sufficient to justify an inference, the most assiduous in attending public worship are the Wesleyan Reformers—45 per cent. of their accommodation (assuming that the chapels might be open for three services) being used in the course of the Sunday; next to whom, in diligence, are the Particular Baptists, using 42 per cent. of their provision; and the scale falls gradually till we come to the Society of Friends who only avail themselves of 8 per cent. of their accommodation. The following List contains the principal Bodies, arranged in the order of their frequency of attendance (the Roman Catholics, however, being omitted, as the greater number of their services prevents comparison):

Portions of the day at which attendants are most numerous.

With reference to the particular periods of the day preferred by different bodies, Table M. will show that the members of the Church of England choose the earlier, while the members of the principal dissenting churches choose the later portion of the Sunday for attendance at religious worship. Thus, while the number of sittings out of every 100 occupied by the former is 48 in the morning, 36 in the afternoon, and only 16 in the evening; the number, out of every 100, occupied by the other Protestant Churches in the aggregate, is 40 in the morning, 26 in the afternoon, and 45 in the evening. This fact exhibits strikingly the different social habits of the members of these bodies; and, even if we did not know as much already, would suffice to prove their difference of social station.

It must not be overlooked, when considering the amount of afternoon attendance, that, amongst Dissenters more especially, that period is occupied to very great extent by Sunday-school instruction. Of the number of children thus instructed at this portion of the day we have no account but as the total number of Sunday Scholars in attendance every Sunday is as many as 1,800,000, the number present every Sunday afternoon must be considerable. The religious knowledge thus administered to children is by no means ineffective:

probably, indeed, this mode of spiritual teaching is far better suited to a child's capacity than is the more elaborate service of the church or chapel.

The most important fact which this investigation as to attendance brings before us is, unquestionably, the alarming number of the non-attendants. Even in the least unfavorable aspect of the figures just presented, and assuming (as no doubt is right) that the 5,288,294 absent every Sunday are not always the same individuals, it must be apparent that a sadly formidable portion of the English people are habitual neglecters of the public ordinances of religion. Nor is it difficult to indicate to what particular class of the community this portion in the main belongs. The middle classes have augmented rather than diminished that devotional sentiment and strictness of attention to religious services by which, for several centuries, they have so eminently been distinguished. With the upper classes, too, the subject of religion has obtained of late a marked degree of notice, and a regular church-attendance is now ranked amongst the recognized proprieties of life. It is to satisfy the wants of these two classes that the number of religious structures has of late years so increased. But while the labouring myriads of our country have been multiplying with our multiplied material prosperity, it cannot, it is feared, be stated that a corresponding increase has occurred in the attendance of this class in our religious edifices. More especially in cities and large towns it is observable how absolutely insignificant a portion of the congregations is composed of artizans. They fill, perhaps, in youth, our National, British, and Sunday Schools, and there receive the elements of a religious education; but, no sooner do they mingle in the active world of labour than, subjected to the constant action of opposing influences, they soon become as utter strangers to religious ordinances as the people of a heathen country. From whatever cause, in them or in the manner of their treatment by religious bodies, it is sadly certain that this vast, intelligent, and growingly important section of our countrymen is thoroughly estranged from our religious institutions in their present aspect. Probably, indeed, the prevalence of infidelity has been exaggerated, if the word be taken in its popular meaning, as implying some degree of intellectual effort and decision; but, no doubt, a great extent of negative, inert indifference prevails, the practical effects of which are much the same. There is a sect, originated recently, adherents to a system called "Secularism"; the principal tenet being that, as the fact of a future life is (in their view) at all events susceptible of some degree of doubt, while the fact and the necessities of a present life are matters of direct sensation, it is therefore prudent to attend exclusively to the concerns of that existence which is certain and immediate—not wasting energies required for present duties by a preparation for remote, and merely possible, contingencies. This is the creed which probably with most exactness indicates the faith which, virtually though not professedly, is entertained by the masses of our working population; by the skilled and unskilled labourer alike—by hosts of minor shopkeepers and Sunday traders—and by miserable denizens of courts and crowded alleys. They are unconscious Secularists—engrossed by the demands, the trials, or the pleasures of the passing hour, and ignorant or careless of a future. These are never or but seldom seen in our religious congregations; and the melancholy fact is thus impressed upon our notice that the classes which are most in need of the restraints and consolations of religion are the classes which are most without them.

Most important result of this inquiry as to attendance.

As was to be expected, in an age so prone to self-inquiry and reform, this attitude of our increasing population towards religion and religious institutions has occasioned much solicitude and many questions; and the Christian church has not been backward to investigate the causes of her ill-success with these the more especial objects of her mission. It is only purposed here to point out some of the more prominent results of this investigation.

Causes of the neglect of religious Institutions:—

1. Social distinctions.

1. One chief cause of the dislike which the labouring population entertain for religious services is thought to be the maintenance of those distinctions by which they are separated as a class from the class above them. Working men, it is contended, cannot enter our religious structures without having pressed upon their notice some memento of inferiority. The existence of pews and the position of the free seats are, it is said, alone sufficient to deter them from our churches; and religion has thus come to be regarded as a purely middle-class propriety or luxury. It is therefore, by some, proposed to abandon altogether the pew system, and to raise by voluntary contributions the amount now paid as seat rents. The objection and proposal come from churchmen and dissenters too; but from the former much more strenuously than from the latter; and with this addition in their case—that they point out the offertory, prescribed by the Rubric, as the specific mode in which the voluntary contributions should be gathered.—To other minds, the prevalence of social distinctions, while equally accepted as a potent cause of the absence of the working classes from religious worship, is suggestive of a different remedy. It is urged that the influence of that broad line of demarcation which on week days separates the workman from his master cannot be effaced on Sundays by the mere removal of a physical barrier. The labouring myriads, it is argued, forming to themselves a world apart, have no desire to mingle, even though ostensibly on equal terms, with persons of a higher grade. Their tastes and habits are so wholly uncongenial with the views and customs of the higher orders, that they feel an insuperable aversion to an intermixture which would bring them under an intolerable constraint. The same disposition, it is said, which hinders them from mixing in the scenes of recreation which the other classes favour, and induces their selection preferably of such amusements as can be exclusively confined to their own order, will for ever operate to hinder their attendance at religious services, unless such services can be devised as shall become exclusively their own. An argument in favour of such measures is supposed to be discovered in the fact that the greatest success amongst these classes is obtained where, as amongst the Methodists, this course is (more perhaps from circumstances than design) pursued. If such a plan were carried out by the Church of England, and by the wealthier Dissenting bodies, it is thought that some considerable advantage would result. It has consequently been proposed to meet so far the prejudices of the working population; and to strive to get them gradually to establish places of worship for themselves. Experiments have been already put in operation with the persons lowest in the social scale; and *RAGGED CHURCHES are in several places making a successful start. In several places, too, among Dissenters, special services in halls and lecture rooms are being held, intended wholly for the working class; and the success of these proceedings seems to prove that multitudes will readily frequent such places, where of course there is a total absence of all class distinctions, who would never enter the exclusive-looking chapel.

2. Indifference of the churches to the social condition of the poor.

2. A second cause of the alienation of the poor from religious institutions is supposed to be an insufficient sympathy exhibited by professed Christians for the alleviation of their social burdens—poverty, disease, and ignorance. It is argued that the various philanthropic schemes which are from time to time originated, though certainly the offspring of benevolent minds, are not associated with the Christian church in such a manner as to gain for it the gratitude of those who thus are benefited. This cause, however, of whatever force it may have been as yet, is certainly in process now of mitigation; for the clergy everywhere are foremost in all schemes for raising the condition of the poor, and the ministers and members of the other churches are not backward in the same good labour.

* The objections to this term are felt as much by the founders of these institutions as by others; but considerable difficulty is felt in providing any substitute.

3. A third cause of the ill-success of Christianity among the labouring classes is supposed to be a misconception on their part of the motives by which Christian ministers are actuated in their efforts to extend the influence of the Gospel. From the fact that clergymen and other ministers receive in exchange for their services pecuniary support, the hasty inference is often drawn, that it is wholly by considerations of a secular and selfish kind that their activity and zeal are prompted.* Or, even if no sordid motives are imputed, an impression is not seldom felt that the exhortations and the pleadings of the ministry are matters merely of professional routine—the requisite fulfilment of official duty. It is obvious that these misapprehensions would be dissipated by a more familiar knowledge; but the evil of the case is, that the influence of such misapprehensions is sufficient to prevent that closer intimacy between pastors and their flocks from which alone such better knowledge can arise. The ministers are distrusted—the poor keep stubbornly aloof: how shall access to them be obtained? The employment of LAY-AGENCY has been proposed as the best of many methods by which minds, indifferent or hostile to the regular clergy, can be reached. It is thought by some that that unfortunate suspicion, by the poor, of some concealed and secretly inimical design, by which the regular ministers are often baffled in their missionary enterprises, might be much allayed if those who introduced the message of Christianity were less removed in station and pursuits from those whom it is sought to influence.

3. Misconceptions of the motives of ministers.

4. Another and a potent reason why so many are forgetful of religious obligations is attributable to their poverty; or rather, probably, to certain conditions of life which seem to be inseparable from less than moderate incomes. The scenes and associates from which the poor, however well disposed, can never, apparently, escape; the vice and filth which riot in their crowded dwellings, and from which they cannot fly to any less degraded homes; what awfully effective teaching, it is said, do these supply in opposition to the few infrequent lessons which the Christian minister or missionary, after much exertion, may impart! How feeble, it is urged, the chance, according to the course of human probabilities, with which the intermittent voice of Christianity must strive against the fearful never-ceasing eloquence of such surrounding evil!—Better dwellings, therefore, for the labouring classes are suggested as a most essential aid and introduction to the labours of the Christian agent.† And, indeed, of secondary influences, few can be esteemed of greater power than this. Perhaps no slight degree of that religious character by which the English middle classes are distinguished is the consequence of their peculiar isolation in distinct and separate houses—thus acquiring almost of necessity, from frequent opportunities of solitude, those habits of reflection which cannot be exercised to the entire exclusion of religious sentiments; but, certainly, however this may be, no doubt can be admitted that a great obstruction to the progress of religion with the working class would be removed if that condition which forbids all solitude and all reflection were alleviated.

4. Poverty and crowded dwellings.

* "A very common objection taken against ministers by men of this [the labouring] class is, that they would not preach or lecture if they were not paid for it; attributing the most sordid motives to all who call the attention of their fellow men to religious subjects. Absurd and untrue as is this objection, yet it is extensively entertained and avowed."—Twenty-seventh Annual Report of the Society for Promoting Christian Instruction.

Inadequate supply of Christian agency.

Probably, however, the grand requirement of the case is, after all, a multiplication of the various agents by whose zeal religious truth is disseminated. Not chiefly an additional provision of religious edifices. The supply of these perhaps, will not much longer, if the present wonderful exertions of the Church of England (aided in but little less degree by other Churches) be sustained, prove very insufficient for the wants of the community. But what is eminently needed is, an agency to bring into the buildings thus provided those who are indifferent or hostile to religious services. The present rate of church-and-chapel-increase brings before our view the prospect, at no distant period, of a state of things in which there will be small deficiency of structures where to worship, but a lamentable lack of worshippers. There is indeed already, even in our present circumstances, too conspicuous a difference between accommodation and attendants. Many districts might be indicated where, although the provision in religious buildings would suffice for barely half of those who might attend, yet scarcely more than half of even this inadequate provision is appropriated. Teeming populations often now surround half empty churches, which would probably remain half empty even if the sittings were all free.* The question then is mainly this: By what means are the multitudes thus absent to be brought into the buildings open for their use? Whatever impeding influence may be exerted by the prevalence of class distinctions, the constraints of poverty, or misconceptions of the character and motives of the ministers of religion, it is evident that absence from religious worship is attributable mainly to a genuine repugnance to religion itself. And, while this lasts, it is obvious that the stream of Christian liberality, now flowing in the channel of church-building, must produce comparatively small results. New churches and new chapels will arise, and services and sermons will be held and preached within them; but the masses of the population, careless or opposed, will not frequent them. It is not, perhaps, sufficiently remembered that the process by which men in general are to be brought to practical acceptance of Christianity is necessarily aggressive. There is no attractiveness, at first, to them in the proceedings which take place within a church or chapel: all is either unintelligible or disagreeable. We can never then, expect that, in response to the mute invitation which is offered by the open door of a religious edifice, the multitudes, all unprepared by previous appeal, will throng to join in what to them would be a mystic worship, and give ear to truths which, though unspeakably beneficent, are also, to such

Necessity of aggressive measures.

* Dr. Chalmers thus narrates the fate of an endeavour to induce, by the offer of sittings at a low rate, and even gratuitously, a better attendance of the working classes:—"An experiment may often be as instructive by its failure, as by its success. We have here to record the fate of a most laudable endeavour, made to recal a people alienated from Christian ordinances to the habit of attendance upon them. The scene of this enterprise was Calton and Bridgeton, two suburb districts of Glasgow which lie contiguous to each other, bearing together a population of above 29,000, and with only one chapel of ease for the whole provision which the establishment has rendered to them. It was thought that a regular evening sermon might be instituted in this chapel, and that for the inducement of a seat-rent so moderate as from 6d. to 1s. 6d. a year, to each individual, many who attended nowhere through the day might be prevailed upon to become the regular attendants of such a congregation. The sermon was preached, not by one stated minister, but by a succession of such ministers as could be found; and as variety is one of the charms of a public exhibition, this also might have been thought a favourable circumstance. But besides, there were gentlemen who introduced the arrangement to the notice of the people, not merely by acting as their informants, but by going round among them with the offer of sittings; and in order to remove every objection on the score of inability, they were authorized to offer seats gratuitously to those who were unable to pay for them. Had the experiment succeeded, it would have been indeed the proudest and most pacific of all victories. But it is greatly easier to make war against the physical resistance of a people, than to make war against the resistance of an established moral habit. And, accordingly, out of 1,500 seats that were offered, not above 50 were let or occupied by those who before had been total non-attendants on religious worship; and then about 150 more were let, not, however, to those whom it was wanted to reclaim, but to those who already went to church through the day, and in whom the taste for church-going had been already formed. And so the matter moved on, heavily and languidly, for some time, till, in six months after the commencement of the scheme, in September 1817, it was finally abandoned."—Christian and Economic Polity, vol. i. p. 123.

persons, on their first announcement, utterly distasteful. Something more, then, it is argued, must be done. The people who refuse to hear the gospel in the church must have it brought to them in their own haunts. If ministers, by standing every Sunday in the desk or pulpit, fail to attract the multitudes around, they must by some means make their invitations heard beyond the church or chapel walls. The myriads of our labouring population, really as ignorant of Christianity as were the heathen Saxons at Augustine's landing, are as much in need of missionary enterprise to bring them into practical acquaintance with its doctrines; and until the dingy territories of this alienated nation are invaded by aggressive Christian agency, we cannot reasonably look for that more general attendance on religious ordinances which, with many other blessings, would, it is anticipated, certainly succeed an active war of such benevolent hostilities.

Nor, it is urged in further advocacy of these missionary efforts, are the people insusceptible of those impressions which it is the aim of Christian preachers to produce. Although by natural inclination adverse to the entertainment of religious sentiments, and fortified in this repugnance by the habits and associations of their daily life, there still remain within them that vague sense of some tremendous want, and those aspirings after some indefinite advancement, which afford to zealous preachers a firm hold upon the conscience even of the rudest multitude. Their native and acquired disinclination for religious truth is chiefly of a negative, inert description—strong enough to hinder their spontaneous seeking of the passive object of their dis-esteem—too feeble to present effectual resistance to the inroads of aggressive Christianity invading their own doors. In illustration, the conspicuous achievements of the patriarchs of Methodism are referred to; and a further proof is found in the success of Mormon emissaries. It is argued that the vast effect produced upon the populace by Wesley and Whitfield, in the course of their unceasing labours, shows that the masses are by no means inaccessible to earnest importunity; while the very progress of the Mormon faith reveals the presence in its votaries of certain dim, unsatisfied religious aspirations, which, to be attracted to an orthodox belief, need only the existence, on the part of orthodox evangelists, of zeal and perseverance similar to those displayed by Mormon “prophets” and “apostles.”

The masses not inaccessible.

Various are the schemes proposed in order to accomplish this more constant and familiar intercourse of Christian teachers with the multitude. The Church of England is at present considerably restricted in its efforts this way by canonical or customary regulations. Nevertheless, so deep is the impression of the urgent nature of the case, that propositions have been made for adapting to the purpose of religious services a greater number of rooms, licensed by the bishops; and it has even been suggested that “street-preaching,” under proper sanction and control, would not be a too energetic measure for the terrible emergency. The employment of additional agents, over and above the augmentation which is necessarily occasioned by the building of additional churches, is also urged; but hitherto not much has been achieved in this direction as compared with what is needed. The necessity, if proper pastoral supervision in town districts is to be accomplished, of a greater number of agents than of churches will be evident on very slight reflection. For many reasons the churches in large towns are constructed of considerable size, and rarely with accommodation for less than 1,000 persons. Under present circumstances, a congregation which should moderately fill an edifice of such dimensions, must be drawn from a neighbourhood containing 4,000 or 5,000 persons. But it evidently is impossible for any minister, compatibly with the severe exertions which the present age imposes on him in respect of pulpit-duties, to perform with reference to any large proportion of these 4,000 or 5,000 persons, that perpetual visitation which is necessary first to gather, and then to retain, them within the Church's fold. The choice, then, seems to be—either a much minuter subdivision of existing districts, with the erection of much smaller churches; or (if large churches are to be retained) the employment, in each district, of a number of additional agents as auxiliaries to the regular incumbent. Both of these plans have been adopted in different portions of the country. Under the various Acts for creating ecclesiastical districts and new parishes, 1,255 such subdivisions have been legally effected; and many “conventional” districts have been formed by private understanding. Of the 1,255 legal districts many are still of very considerable size, and clearly quite beyond the management of any one incumbent. The varying populousness of the whole (excepting three, of which the population has not been ascertained) is seen as follows:—

Districts containing	Less than 100 persons	1	Districts containing	1500 and less than 2000 persons	86
	100 and less than 200	6		2000 " 3000 "	193
	200 " 300 "	18		3000 " 4000 "	160
	300 " 400 "	28		4000 " 5000 "	104
	400 " 500 "	33		5000 " 10,000 "	217
	500 " 750 "	101		10,000 " 15,000 "	53
	750 " 1000 "	91		15,000 " 20,000 "	20
	1000 " 1500 "	127		20,000 persons and upwards	14

So that many of these districts are themselves too large, and need to be again the subjects of partition. But this plan of subdivision, so unquestionably useful in wide country parishes and very large town parishes, becomes perhaps of doubtful application to a moderate-sized town parish (4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants), where a single church with 1,500 sittings will suffice for all who would attend. The erection of another church in such a case would seem to be an injudicious measure; and yet, in such a parish, the exertions of a single clergyman, however active, cannot but be far from adequate. The awkwardness arises from the fact that the area which a minister can cover in the course of pastoral oversight is far from co-extensive with the sphere which he can influence by his ministrations in his church: he can preach to 1,500 people, but he cannot visit and effectually supervise the third of such a number. If this be correct, we seem to be driven to the employment, in such cases, of additional agents rather than the erection of additional churches. These additional agents may, of course, be of two kinds—clerical and lay; and vigorous efforts have been made, of late years, to provide a satisfactory supply of both. The “Society for Promoting the Employment of Additional Curates in Populous Places,” founded in 1836, with a present income of 18,000*l.* per annum, aids in providing 323 such curates. By Sir Robert Peel’s Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37.) the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have power to assign new districts, and provide by endowment for the appointment of clergymen to minister therein without churches; and these Commissioners have made 232 such districts; but all these appointments are in contemplation of a church being sooner or later provided. There appears to be no scheme for giving to a clergyman the cure of souls, within a small and definite locality, apart from the very onerous duties which attach to the possession of a church.

Lay-agency in the Church of England.

The employment of lay-agency has been a measure forced upon the Church both by the clear impossibility of worthily supporting, if entirely clerical, so numerous a body as is requisite for any really effective visitation of the poor, and also by the evidently readier access which at first is granted by that class to overtures from persons of their own condition, having no professional garb. It has been thought that by employing in each populous town parish, in subordination to the clergyman, and with his sanction, a considerable staff of such assistants, much impression might be made upon that part of his parishioners which unavoidably eludes his personal attentions; that considerable numbers might be thus allured within the circle of his influence, and prepared for his maturer teaching, who would otherwise continue utterly untaught; and that this might be effectually accomplished without even in the least infringing on the ministerial office. Probably the force of these suggestions was assisted by the practical experience of such a plan afforded by the Methodist community, in which some ten or fifteen thousand laymen are employed not merely in the work of visitation, but also in that of preaching; and it might have been concluded that if such a wide responsibility could be conferred on Methodist lay-agents, while the regular Methodist ministers lost none of their prerogatives, but rather gained augmented influence, the benefits which must result to the poorer classes from the efforts of lay visitors and Scripture readers in connection with the Church of England, were not likely to be counterbalanced by the least depreciation of the functions of the regular clergy. And the actual result appears, according to the testimony of incumbents who have tried the plan, to justify these expectations.—The extent to which lay-agency is now adopted by the Church of England is not easily computed. There are two Societies by which such agents are supported or assisted—the Pastoral Aid Society and the Scripture Readers Association;—the former aiding 128 lay agents and the latter 323. Independently of these, however, there are doubtless many supported by individual and local funds. There are also many District Visitors. The Lay Assistants and the Scripture Readers are expected to devote six hours per day to their engagements. They are limited to conversation and the reading of the Bible and Prayer Book. They are not, on any account, to preach.*

By the various Protestant Dissenting churches too, the question of the readiest way to reach the working classes has of late had much attention. Lectures, specially addressed to them, and services conducted in the public halls or rooms with which they are familiar and to which they will resort without objection though deterred from church or chapel, are (as we have seen) amongst the means adopted to attract them to religious habits. In these various operations lay exertion is of course encouraged; but—excepting by the Methodists, with whom it has been long adopted to the utmost—not to that extent which, from the views which most Dissenting bodies entertain upon the subject of the ministerial office, might have been expected. The Independents and the Baptists have each a “Home Missionary Society;” and the members of these bodies aid in supporting such undenominational societies as the “London City Mission.” But the amount of lay exertion proceeding from individual churches (congregations), though considerable, is much less, especially in large towns, than might, from their professed opinions on the nature of the Christian ministry †, have been anticipated. This has not been unobserved by some amongst them—

Lay-agency
amongst Dissenter.

* The London City Mission (founded in 1835) occupies a space midway between the Church of England and the Protestant Dissenting churches. Supported by a combination of the two, its operations are conducted without reference to the peculiarities of either. Its 300 missionaries visit the dwellings of the poor—distribute tracts—and hold religious conversations: services for prayer and exposition of the Scriptures, too, are held in rooms (not licensed or consecrated) from time to time.

† “So, neither does our polity reject the labours, in preaching the Gospel, of brethren not in the ministerial office. The order of the ministry, and the benefits of that order, are not destroyed because some are preachers who are not ministers. The world, the church, the ministry itself, need the zealous labours of all who can aid to diffuse the truth of God and to save the souls of men. We deem the order of the ministry to be in excess and in abuse when to it must be sacrificed all gifts and all activities not within its range—when no man may say to his neighbour, ‘know the Lord,’ if he belong not to an exclusive order of teachers.”—Congregational Union Tract Series, No. X.

selves* ; and recently considerable agitation has been manifested on this subject in a portion of the Independent body. It is urged that ministers, especially in the larger congregations, have assumed too much authority, appropriated too exclusively the work of spiritual teaching, and discouraged rather than assisted the development and exercise of those abilities and gifts which, though abundantly possessed, are little exercised by members of the Congregational churches. This monopoly of teaching, it is argued, has considerably hindered the diffusion of the truth amongst the masses ; as the single pastor of each congregation, overburdened with those duties which a proper oversight of his already gathered flock demands, has neither time nor strength nor aptitude for those incursions on neglected portions of his neighbourhood which might with safety and with ease be undertaken and accomplished by selected members of his church. This party, therefore, urges a return to what is thought to have been the custom in the primitive church,—plurality of elders ; thus, without depriving pastors of their present influence, relieving them from their excess of toil, and greatly multiplying the amount of Christian agency available for spreading Christianity.

At present, the grand employers of lay agency, amongst Dissenters, are the Methodists, who, in the aggregate, possess perhaps as many as 20,000 preachers and class leaders not belonging to the ministerial order. Nothing, probably, has more contributed than this to their success amongst the working population. The community whose operations penetrate most deeply through the lower sections of the people is the body called the Primitive Methodists ; whose trespasses against what may be thought a proper order will most likely be forgiven when it is remembered that perhaps their rough, informal energy is best adapted to the class to which it is addressed, and that, at all events, for every convert added to their ranks, society retains one criminal, one drunkard, one improvident the less.†

Lay-agency of
Sunday School Teachers.

In estimating the extent and power of lay exertion for religious objects, we must not forget the vast amount of Christian zeal and influence displayed and exercised by teachers in Sunday Schools. Of these there were, at the time of the Census, more than 250,000, instructing every Sunday in religious knowledge as many as 1,800,000 children.‡ It is difficult to overstate the value of these voluntary labours, much as the effect of them, unhappily, is lost, when, verging on maturity, the scholar ceases to attend the school without commencing or continuing to frequent the church. Few questions can be more momentous than the one which all the friends of Sunday Schools are anxiously endeavouring to answer,—By what means can the salutary influence exerted on so many in the period of their youth be still exerted on them when they shall become adults? Some have suggested that the bond which unites a teacher with his

* "Let me touch, as lightly and delicately as possible, upon another mischievous product of the professional sentiment—the strong temptation it sometimes presents to repress or impede the development of lay talent and enterprise." "Wonderful, most wonderful, is the dearth of genius, of talent, of peculiar aptitude, of striking character, of plodding industry, of almost everything indicative of mind on the alert, in connexion with the spiritual action of the unofficial bulk of evangelical churches. In no equally extensive area of human interest, perhaps, can such a level uniformity of unproductiveness be discovered. How is this? we ask. What will account for it? There cannot but be the influence of an unfriendly system constantly at work. I attribute the result to what I have designated professionalism—the monopoly, on principle, of spiritual functions by a special order deemed to have received their prerogative from the Head of the Church, and indisposed therefore, not unnecessarily from jealousy, but from deference to mistaken notions of polity, to call out lay-agency in the prosecution of strictly spiritual objects."—The British Churches in Relation to the British People. By E. Miall, M.P.

† It may not be unworthy of consideration, also, whether the labours of such agents do not practically operate to prepare the classes which they influence, for the more refined and less exciting worship of the other churches. It is certain that the progress of the Church of England in attracting to herself the affections of the multitude has been contemporaneous with the increase of Dissent ; and it may not be improbable that many, who would not have been originally won by her advances, have, through the agency of such Dissenting teachers, as by a sort of preliminary education, been enabled to appreciate her services.

‡ The total number of Sunday Scholars, on the books of the Schools, was about 2,400,000 ; the number given above is about the number attending every Sunday. There are about two teachers to every fifteen scholars.

scholars need not be dissolved by their departure from the school; but that the more experienced instructors—thus becoming a superior order of lay-agents—might erect, midway between the school and the congregation, a new species of religious institution, which, while the school would be for it a natural preparation, would itself be no less natural an introduction to more regular and formal worship.

Mention ought not perhaps, when noticing the need of further agency, to be omitted of an increase thought to be desirable in the higher kinds of spiritual officers. The extension of the episcopate is thought to have been rendered necessary by the great increase of churches, clergymen, and population which has taken place since most of the existing sees were formed. Extension of the episcopate.

The practical result of this feeling has been principally shown in the creation (by 6 & 7 Wm. IV. cap. 77.) of the two additional sees of Manchester and Ripon. The other efforts of legislation on the subject have been directed more toward the equalization than the multiplication of the sees, as the following Table (24) of the changes which have been effected since 1831 will show. It will be observed that some of the sees are still as large and populous as several continental principalities. Not fewer than 60 has been named as the number of bishops necessary for a really effective superintendence of this aggregate population; but in contemplation of some difficulties in the way of such a large extension of the present episcopate, suggestions have been made for the revival of suffragan bishops *.

* "In the 26 Henry VIII. c. 14. twenty-six places are mentioned for which bishops suffragan may be appointed. The archbishop or bishop is to present two persons to the king, of whom he is to nominate one to be a suffragan. The authority of such suffragans shall be limited by their commissions, which they shall not exceed on pain of præmunire. These commissions are to be given by the bishop's presentation.—This Act was repealed by 1 & 2 Philip and Mary, c. 8. and revived by 1 Eliz. c. 1.—Bishops suffragan are spoken of in the 35th Canon of 1604. It would be very desirable that in populous dioceses they should be appointed now, and there seems no legal reason why they should not be."—Short's History of the Church of England, p. 484.

† The population of these dioceses is given within the limits which are to belong to them on the next avoidance of the sees of Carlisle and Winchester. For the population, within existing limits, see post, SUMMARY TABLES, page 112.

Prominent Facts elicited by the whole Inquiry.

Prominent facts elicited by the whole Inquiry

The great facts which appear to me to have been elicited by this inquiry are,—that, even taking the accommodation provided by all the sects, including the most extravagant, unitedly, there are 1,644,734 inhabitants of England who, if all who might attend religious services were willing to attend, would not be able, on account of insufficient room, to join in public worship: that this deficiency prevails almost exclusively in towns, especially large towns: that, if these 1,644,734 persons are to be deprived of all excuse for non-attendance, there must be at least as many additional sittings furnished, equal to about 2,000 churches and chapels, and a certain number more if any of the present provision be regarded as of doubtful value; and that even such additional accommodation will fall short of the requirement if the edifices are so often, as at present, closed. Further, it appears that as many as 5,288,294 persons able to attend, are every Sunday absent from religious services, for all of whom there is accommodation for at least one service: that neglect like this, in spite of opportunities for worship, indicates the insufficiency of any mere addition to the number of religious buildings: that the greatest difficulty is to fill the churches when provided; and that this can only be accomplished by a great addition to the number of efficient, earnest, religious teachers, clerical or lay, by whose persuasions the reluctant population might be won.

Ability of the Church to provide for the emergency.

That, having thus displayed before it the precise requirements of the times, the Christian Church will fail in adequately meeting the emergency, is what the many recent proofs of its abounding liberality and zeal forbid us in the least to fear. The means, though latent, are at hand; the agents, though unknown, are ready: nothing more is wanted than the action of the rulers of the Church to gather and direct them. If the following pages serve to make the task less difficult of properly directing such exertions, no small portion will have been attained of the advantages which you considered would result from this inquiry.

These, Sir, are the observations which have occurred to me in introducing these statistics. I am conscious that, although in illustration of the Tables I have been compelled, in order to secure an early publication, to shorten my remarks, they have upon the whole been too extended; and I cannot expect that, in the unavoidable haste with which they have been written, by one previously unacquainted with the subject, they are free from error. But I do indulge a hope that they are free from bias. It has been my study strictly to fulfil the task of a reporter,—pointing out results, but not constructing arguments; describing fairly the opinions of others, but not presuming to express my own. It is, however, in the facts and figures which succeed that any value which belongs to this inquiry will be found; and these—much labour having been bestowed upon them—are, I think, sufficiently complete to justify whatever inferences may, by those accustomed to statistical investigations, fairly be deduced. If this should be the case, the public will assuredly be grateful, Sir, to you for undertaking, and to Government for sanctioning, as part of the decennial Census, an inquiry which must certainly reveal important facts relating to that most important of all subjects—the religious state of the community. Inquiry upon such a subject will not, surely, be considered as beneath the notice or beyond the province of a Government, if only it be recollected that, apart from those exalted and immeasurable interests with which religion is connected in the destinies of all—on which it is the office rather of the Christian preacher to dilate—no inconsiderable portion of the secular prosperity and peace of individuals and states depends on the extent to which a pure religion is professed and practically followed. If we could imagine the effects upon a people's temporal condition of two different modes of treatment—education separate from religion, and religion separate from education*—doubtless we should gain a most impressive lesson of the inappreciable value of religion even to a nation's physical advancement. For, whatever the dissuasive influence, from crime and grosser vice, of those refined ideas which in general accompany augmented knowledge, yet undoubtedly it may occur that, under the opposing influence of social misery, increased intelligence may only furnish to the vicious and the criminal increased facilities for evil. But the wider and more penetrating influence exerted by religious principle—controlling conscience rather than refining taste—is seldom felt without conferring, in addition to its higher blessings, those fixed views and habits which can scarcely fail to render individuals prosperous and states secure. Applying to the regulation of their daily conduct towards themselves and towards society the same high sanctions which control them in their loftier relations, Christian men become, almost inevitably, temperate, industrious, and provident, as part of their religious duty; and Christian citizens acquire respect for human laws from having learnt to reverence those which are divine. The history of men and states shows nothing more conspicuously than this—that in proportion as a pure and practical religion is acknowledged and pursued are individuals materially prosperous† and nations orderly and free. It is thus that religion “has the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come.”

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Census Office,
8 December 1853.

Your very faithful Servant,

HORACE MANN.

* That is, using the term “Education” with its popular meaning.

† The founders of religious sects have generally been so conscious of the tendency of religion to increase the temporal riches of their followers, that they have often expressed their apprehensions of a future when prosperity should be the cause of their declension. The Quakers, amidst all the persecutions of their early days, advanced so rapidly in wealth that Fox gave frequent utterance to his fears on that account. John Wesley, too, had similar misgivings with respect to his societies.

4 Of the 23,674 places of worship open in the morning, 1,487 did not return the number of their sittings, and a similar omission was made with respect to 1,424 out of the 21,373 open in the afternoon, and 998 out of the 18,052 open in the evening. For the particular sects affected by these omissions; and for an estimate of the number of sittings included in the defective Returns, see post, page 111.

5 These numbers for the Independent Methodists are inaccurate. By a mistake, discovered too late for rectification, some of their congregations have been included with those of other bodies. The total, however, is very small, and too few to affect the comparative position of these

* The appellations in this List are given exactly as they were used by the parties making the Returns.

† The Returns afford no information as to the number of sittings in 71 of the above-mentioned 539 places of worship. The distribution of these defective Returns among the various Denominations is as follows:—Independents and Baptists, 2; Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans, 1; Independents and Wesleyans, 1; Independents and Primitive Methodists, 1; Mixed, 5; Calvinists, 13; Millenarians, 1; Christians, 13; Christian Society, 2; Gospel Pilgrims, 1; Free Gospel Christians, 3; Evangelists, 1; Protestant Dissenters, 1; Town Mission, 3; Seaman's Bethel, 1; Christian Mission, 1; Free Church, 1; Doubtful, 17; Christian Israelites, 1; Stephanites, 1; Rational Progressionists, 1.

‡ The number of attendants is not stated in the case of 33 of the above 539 places of worship. Of these 33, there belong to Baptists and Wesleyans, 1; Mixed, 1; Calvinists, 7; Christians, 4; Unitarian, 1; Evangelists, 2; Protestant Dissenters, 1; Dissenters, 1; London City Mission, 1; Railway Mission, 1; Mission Society, 1; Teetotallers, 1; Doubtful, 9; Stephanites, 1; Inghamites, 1.

§ For an explanation of the grouping here adopted, see Report, p. 153.

* The method adopted in preparing this estimate has been to take the average number of sittings for each body, for the whole of England and Wales, and apply this average to each defective return, where there is no more specific criterion; but where the average number of sittings in any case is less than the number of persons actually attending at one service, the plan has been to put down the number of sittings in that case at one fourth more than the number of attendants.

† Calculated wholly from the complete Returns.

* There are various methods of making a computation of the probable number of attendants at places of worship for which no information upon this point was supplied. The plan adopted for this Table has been to assume that each of the places of worship making defective returns would have had as many attendants as the average number shown to have been present at the places of worship making complete returns. Thus, for the Church of England, to discover the probable morning attendance in the 939 churches, the returns from which were silent on that point, the proportion would be as 13,138 : 2,371,732 :: 939. Similar proportions would give the probable afternoon and evening attendance. The same process has been repeated for each religious body; except for the REFORMED IRISH PRESBYTERIANS, in which case, there being only one chapel and the attendants there not stated, no materials exist for any calculation.

* This Table may be read thus:—Out of every 100 sittings belonging to the Church of England, there were occupied, by attendants,—in the morning, 47; in the afternoon, 35; and in the evening, 16; while the total number of sittings occupied by attendants in the course of the whole day was 33 per cent. of the number which might have been occupied if all the churches had been open for three services. And so of the other Bodies. In many cases, of course, the sittings were not occupied because the buildings were closed.

† The apparent excess of attendants over sittings in the morning among the Roman Catholics is explained by the fact that they generally have several services, for different persons, at that period of the day.

* The mode of compiling this Table has been, to take for every individual church or chapel the service (whether Morning, Afternoon, or Evening) at which most persons were present, and make an aggregate for each of the bodies above mentioned. In some cases the best attendance would be in the Morning, in others, in the Afternoon, in others, in the Evening. The total thus divided would show the minimum number of persons who attended service on March 30, 1851, if none attended more than one church or chapel. To the extent to which the practice prevails of frequenting more than one place of worship will this inference be liable to modification.

The same consideration will affect the comparative proportions between different bodies; since no doubt some numbers who attended Dissenters' services in the evening had worshipped with the Church of England in an earlier portion of the day.
